Washington News (Continued from Page 1) To administer the program in Oregon it cost $149,556 and in the state of Washington $93,774. Every county in Oregon received benefits, the lowest being Clatsop, with $5053; the highest Linn, with $218,971. In Washington the range was $2717 in Mason county to $244,820 in Whitman.

Oregon To Share In National Defense Upper bracket officials are rushing a program extending the national defense and appropriations will be requested of the next congress early in January for another billion dollars. It will include one million, at least, for Tongue Point, at the mouth of the Columbia river; other millions to increase the number of airports and expand the airports now existing, and funds for building highways capable of standing up under the pounding of mobile artillery, and wide enough to permit brigades to be transported quickly.

This 'N' That War in Europe has changed the picture in Washington. Such topics as relief, WPA, spending-lending, congressional probes, have all been relegated while the administration, from President Roosevelt down to the messengers, discuss nothing but "the situation". So carefully had the administration formulated plans that the shock was cushioned and the financial market, always the first to be upset, was not disturbed. No cabinet member is watching developments more intently than Secretary of Agriculture Wallace for the conflict is expected to furnish a market for some of America's surplus food products.

Approval has been given for a WPA project which is to make copies of official records in all Oregon counties and transcriptions of historic articles in newspapers prior to 1891. A similar compilation is planned for Washington State.
