COW HOLLOW

By The Happy Farmer

About this time of year, only a few years ago, would find hundreds of bands of sheep in Malheur county just getting started good to lambing.

Now you can drive a few miles down any of the old roads and you will see many vacant lambing sheds. And every range stockman, whether sheep or cattle, is cussing the Taylor Grazing act. The Taylor Grazing act doesn't affect the farmer with his small farm flock and any farmer with a small flock of sheep will tell you that a farm flock will pay better than any stock he can raise. Still, one of the 17 farmers in Cow Hollow, Eliza Niocum, has the only sheep in the Hollow. He came here about 22 months ago with 12 or 15 ewes and their lambs. Now he has 40 head, and he has never bought a sheep nor sold a ewe lamb.

Doc Raffington borrowed Geo. Gabriel's wagon last week to haul a load of hay from his field to his barnyard. At this time last year when Doc's name was mentioned we would slowly shake our heads. None of us had much hopes of old Doc even living to see grass again, what with his pneumonia, then a stroke and then that terrible rheumatism. It was slow, for he is now 69 years old, but this fall he helped all the neighbors thresh, then done more fall farming than any one in the valley and owns and works the most fractious horse in the Hollow.

Now in the midst of winter when bad horses are almost past working and one would expect an old man to be laid up with his pains, Old Doc takes this horse in his team, goes and gets a wagon and hauls hay.

The bad horse caused a runaway and almost threw the rack off the wagon but old Doc gets the rack back on and goes ahead and works the horse.

That is the spirit that tames the west and is changing Cow Hollow from a desert sagebrush gulch to a beautiful green shoestring valley with a fine road down the middle and fine happy homes on either side.

Chet Sage sold the rest of his weaner pigs this week.

It seems that all the market places are getting full of weaner pigs. We suppose politics will soon be disrupting the plan of paying us to kill off the little pigs. 'Tis too bad some brilliant politician can't conceive the idea of opening the great American market to the American farmer.

Our neighbor Elmer Clonninger, is now lieutenant of a CCC camp at Riggin, Idaho. The other day while going to Boise for the company payroll his car slipped off the grade and rolled over three times. There was no one hurt much, but 'tis said the lieutenant pulled the steering wheel off attempting to hold tight while his companion kicked out most of the glasses.

The CCC boys do a fine work, but there is still thousands of unemployed boys and men in the cities that would like to be in CCC camps buildning roads, cleaning up forests and doing many other useful things instead of living on relief.

Bill Parker has traded for a truck and brought it home Monday and is going to sort of re-build it. One of the most important jobs he expects to do with it is to go to the hills and haul himself some posts to fence his place and he wants poles, too.

Jim Trummel hauled water last week and filled his cistern. Jim's cistern is small and this is the second time he has filled it since the water went off in the canal.

It would be a fine thing for the farmers and small stock men if the Reclamation would give us a 10 day run in the canal when we have a warm spell in the winter. That would fill our cisterns and ponds and hold us till the water comes on in the spring. As it is now, there is seven out of 17 of the Cow Hollow farmers now hauling stock water and Elza and Clarence Niocum will soon have to join them, too.

We all bow our heads at the passing of Senator Borah. He was certainly the farmer's friend. Many of us had hoped for another chance to vote for him for president.
