

COW HOLLOW
By The Happy Farmer

"In the spring a young man's fancy often turns to thoughts of love."

A few days ago a car was winding slowly down the Cow Hollow trail. When it approached near the Elza Niccum home we saw that it was a bashful neighbor young man who generally burns up the road, but this time he had a girl friend along. They passed the house a short way and the car slowly came to a stop. Elza, watching, cried, "Oh! they are going into a huddle." Then says, "Nah! they are just changing seats, she is going to drive."

To us all it doesn't seem but just a short while since the days when we were young, and oh what fun

it was to teach the girls to drive the old "Model T."

Spring has come upon us with a bound. We have been looking and hoping to get in the field for a long time, but it is sure here now. You go down the road and every tractor is at work. Most every new land farmer has a team in the field. On the old tract we see mostly tractors. We pass one field where works one tractor two manure spreader and three men. They are sure "spreading it on." One man takes the tractor and a spreader and spreads one load of manure while the other two load the other spreader. He comes back, pulls up to the pile, unhooks, hitches onto the other spreader and is gone again.

That's the way to get the job done. It's getting late and the bees should be in.

To us fellows up Cow Hollow, 'tis fine to be above the most of the fog in the winter time and those swarms of crows and blackbirds don't come this far from the river, but we don't thaw out quite so early in the spring either, so we are a little late drying up so we can go to work.

Jim Trummel and Dale Limbaugh both have tried plowing on the north slope but 'tis still too wet. They both had to give it up. Jim had some potato ground on the more sandy bottom that he has disked, floated and seeded to wheat and alfalfa already. That is the first seeded in Cow Hollow this year. Elza Niccum has some disked and will be seeded in a day or so now.

Clarence Niccum on the south side started to disk Monday, but had to give it up. Too wet.

Everybody is busy and rushing to the limit. Doc Raffington has a hired man. Doc has the largest place in the Hollow and is getting the last of it in this spring, is plowing up part of his hay land and just has more work than one man can get done. Doc isn't quite as young as he once was anyway.

Frank Parker has all the irrigable land on his place grubbed and the brush burned now and he is ready to begin turning the soil as soon as it dries a little more.

Sam and Homer Cates have the rest of their place railed and hand grubbed now, just a matter of burning the brush and they will be ready to turn the soil, too.

The fellow on Mort Wixon's place is cleaning up, polishing up and making the place shine. Mort and Hazel were back Sunday. As they went down in the cellar to get some canned fruit, Hazel remarked, "It seems pretty nice to be going down in the cellar to get some canned fruit, don't it?" Mort says "Nah!" He still remembers the back-breaking job of digging that cellar, the cistern, clearing all that sagebrush off, irrigating that new land and fighting those d—thistles. He has the place rented out for two years. He still has plenty of time for some more and different memories before he can get it back again.

Chuck Share struck water in his well at 146 feet. There is another man that is sure glad to be off the water wagon. Hauling stock water is sure a job and Chuck knows it, too. Last year Chuck hauled water from the Owyhee river and this year he put his stock out for the winter.

Elza Niccum's sheep did not last long. It is dry now and his cistern soon will be, then he will be hauling stock water, too.

Doc Raffington says, "A man was up the other day to see me about drilling a well." It wouldn't take much to persuade Doc to get a well. If we can just get out of debt a little there is a lot of things we would like to have.
