ONE INDUSTRY IS PREPARED—Last week saw the official unveiling of several 1941 model automobiles, and despite the war in Europe, conscription in America and uncertainty in politics, the sales executives predict a banner year for the new cars.

What I wondered as I heard their optimistic talks was: If more people keep buying more cars and the war keeps increasing its mechanized tempo—then what are we going to do about our oil supply?

You will recall that a year ago we voted on a measure for State control of petroleum production, and the general impression we got during the campaign was that the Army, the Navy, the Department of Interior and practically everyone else connected with the government felt that we were in danger of exhausting our oil resources otherwise. The bill was defeated and consumption has increased greatly since then; has the problem also grown more grave?

Not according to statisticians of the Pacific Coast petroleum industry, for in talking to one of its representatives last week end, I found that this country not only produces enough gasoline products to take care of us for years to come, but also produces such a superior grade that it gives us world wide supremacy in performance as well as in quantity.

For example, our Pacific Coast oil companies are producing 2,000,000 gallons per day of aviation gasoline, enough to fuel five times as many military airplanes as we now have. Furthermore, our gasoline is so much better than foreign brands that our planes can fly 30 per cent faster, climb 25 per cent quicker, carry 25 per cent more load, and give 80 per cent more engine wear.

The Pacific Coast production alone can keep 1313 bombers (or 1458 pursuit planes) in the air for four hours a day—day after day. The Pacific Coast industry alone can supply the Navy with all the oil and grease it needs—day after day. The Pacific Coast field alone can keep the Army's tanks, trucks, motorcycles, guns and cannons going—day after day. Yes, it can do all this and still keep our private and commercial automobiles running as usual, and continue to supply fuel for all present and future needs in our factories, stores and homes.

Besides all that, the oil industry is furnishing elements which are being used in synthetic rubber, in TNT, and in dozens of other products which are vital to our defense program, and it can keep on supplying them.

These statistical experts say that our present known supply in California can last for 20 years, in spite of a terrific consumption such as war might demand, and that new underground fields are being discovered faster than the old ones are being drained, to give us an even larger reserve.

Furthermore, because our oil is drawn from such deep sources, it is practically immune from possible enemy bomb attacks, since the pools have natural "air-raid shelters" more than a mile below ground. Not only that, but there are nearly 20,000 single wells scattered in 60 separate fields in the State, which would present a tough problem itself to an attacking air armada.

More than any other nation in the world, the United States is able to look upon one phase of its defense program—the petroleum industry—with satisfaction. The industry's voluntary conservation of much of its resources, plus its constant research into new fields and its steady improvement of drilling, piping and refining facilities, assures us of a trump card in any international emergency.

The preparedness of our oil industry is in sharp contrast to the underdevelopment in so many other fields of national defense. It is a story which should be widely told, so that Americans may know that not everything is "on order." With petroleum, it is "on hand."
