

COW HOLLOW

Everyone in Cow Hollow is plenty busy now. (Sort of running sideways to keep from flying.)

Doing their utmost to help get the hay all up while the good weather holds out keeps everyone busy. Cow Hollow hay is all up except Eastmans, Sessions and part of Sam Cates and some of Russel Howells.

The hay cures very slow at this time of the year. With the unsettled weather it is an awful temptation to make the hay too quick. Then it just won't cure in the shock at all.

Sam Cates raked his hay too quick and when they started to stack it, the fork would not go into it.

There is no telling when it will be cured enough to stack now.

We have had the usual rush to get cisterns repaired and filled before the water goes off. When we thought the water would go off the fifteenth, all other work was dropped so that cistern work might go on.

Frank Parker dug a hole about four feet in the ground, then concreted it up to about three feet above the ground for a cistern. He then banked around it with dirt. It was on the hill side above his house. The idea was to have water under pressure for the house.

Several of the neighbors were in to help with the concrete work. It was a last minute rush to get it finished and filled by the 15th.

The cistern was finished and the water turned in about midnight of the fourteenth.

Frank went out at daylight next morning to find that his cistern overflowed and washed the new dirt bank from the east end of the cistern, removing the re-enforcement and caused a crack down the corner. A big glob of concrete was broke off the end and more than half of his water was gone.

The water was extended until the 20th, so he had time to call in a neighbor to help repair and refill the cistern.

Elza Niccum, Doc Raffington and Clarence Niccum, all had last minute cistern troubles but of lesser degree.

Bill Parker and Elza Niccum both have cisterns still in the digging stage. It is hard to tell a neighbor now when he comes for help to get his hay stacked and it looks like rain any time.

So Bill Parker left his cistern work and went to help Clarence Niccum hay, when it meant that he wouldn't get his cistern finished in time to fill it and that means hauling barrels of water this winter.

The lettuce crop is good out here but the market is playing hard on the lettuce growers. We hear that Nyssa shipped 68 cars of lettuce one of the early days of the season. The 68 cars were more than half of the 128 total cars of lettuce for the whole U. S. A. for that day.

It would seem that Nyssa has gone on the map as a lettuce raising center. The lettuce market has gone off to where the raiser is holding the sack.

Jack Parker, who is working in the lettuce was telling Johnnie Hamilton, who raises lettuce how scarce help was. The workers went on strike for 50 cents an hour.

Johnnie says "I will give you my seven acres of lettuce if you will give me a job at fifty cents an hour to harvest it."

Luit Cloninger cut 2,500 crates of lettuce in the second cutting of his 18 acres of lettuce.

After the harvest expense was paid it netted him just nine dollars.

The soil conservation adjuster was at Johnnie Hamilton's Tuesday and he learned that planting lettuce without allotment would just cost him 20 dollars per acre out of his soil conservation payment.

"In Germany it pays to obey Mr. Hitler."

Pheasants had a very difficult time in Cow Hollow last Sunday. The bombardment was very heavy and there were many casualties. Last year there were not many hunters up here but it seemed that all the hunters made Cow Hollow Sunday.

Most of the farmers tolerated the hunters without much objection.

Shorty Black said a year or so ago he had a calf to die with blood just as the hunting season was over. He skinned the calf and found that there was not a place on it large enough to put your hand where it was not covered with shot.

He says, "How do I now that all my cows are not shot up that way." That calf didn't get all those shot at one time.

When I am in the field and a hunter asks if he can hunt on my place, I answer, "all right, if you won't shoot at me."

If the good weather holds out all Cow Hollow clover seed will soon be in the stack. Russell Howell has his stacked and George Gabriel expects to have his stacked by Thursday.
