PLANS GO FORWARD ON SIRE ASS'N

Initial steps toward the organization of a bull stud association in the Cairo community were taken at a meeting held in the Boulevard Grange Hall on Friday evening, November 1. A committee composed of Ray Whitsell, D. Peters and Coy Brown were appointed to complete the organization.

Joe Dyer, Manager of the Ontario branch of the U. S. National bank, announced that the bank would provide three bulls, one each of the three major dairy breeds, for use of the association provided it could be organized and managed so that it would perpetuate itself. According to Mr. Dyer, the bank is anxious to take part in the development of sound enterprises in the area and believes that assisting in making high quality purebred sires available is the best way of accomplishing this.

R. W. Morse, extension Dairyman from Oregon State College, explained the operation of dairy bull studs elsewhere stating that they had been proven practical as a means of providing high quality bulls for use of owners of only a few dairy animals.

The committee appointed at the meeting Friday is expected to draw up articles of association to fit the conditions in the Cairo community, to select a man to operate the bull stud and to proceed with the contacting of herd owners within a radius of six miles of Cairo to obtain patrons for the association. It is hoped to have an association actually in operation shortly after the first of the year.

NYSSA STUDENTS NAMED IN GUIDE

By Jack H. Brodie

OREGON STATE COLLEGE—(Special)—Nine students from Nyssa are listed in the new Oregon State College student directory released on the campus last Monday. Under the slogan "Lonely—Phone your One and Only," a drive is being made to sell one to every student on the campus.

Containing nearly 5500 names, the Fusser's Guide, as it is called, gives the school, class, home address, school address and phone number of every student attending OSC. In addition, 600 members of the college staff are listed.

Following are the names, school and Corvallis address of Nyssa students attending OSC this fall.

Jack Brodie, Jr., agricultural engineering, Box 91, Weatherford hall; Hollis DeGroot, agriculture, 420 Kings Road; Paul Johnston, Sr., education, 420 N. 16th.

STATE CAPITOL NEWC

A. L. LINDBECK
State Capitol News Bureau

SALEM—It was the privilege of this writer to spend two days this past week with the troops of the 41st division at Camp Murray, Washington.

In a painstaking survey designed to uncover conditions in the camp, I found that in spite of almost continual rainfall which has, naturally, added to the discomforts of camp life the troops are well fed, fairly comfortably housed, adequately clothed, the morale of the troops is high, the health of the camp excellent and there is a minimum of complaint among the men themselves over the conditions under which they live and train in the new role as soldiers of Uncle Sam's regular army.

The last of the squad tents has now been equipped with a board floor and work in now under way on board sidewalks for the tents to further protect the men against the inclement weather of the wintry days ahead. Each tent is equipped and has been from the outset with a Sibley stove, entirely adequate for heating purposes. The men sleep warm and comfortably on steel cots supplied with good mattresses with three heavy woolen blankets—some have four—sheets and pillows, the latter heretofore looked upon as a luxury in an army camp.

Clothing issued to the men includes two wool blouses, two pair of wool slacks, two pair of heavy army shoes, one complete fatigue uniform of heavy blue denim, three suits of long wool underwear, three suits of light cotton underwear, four pairs of wool socks and three pairs of cotton socks, a heavy army overcoat and a raincoat, a regulation army hat and a cap for dress wear. A few of the men have not yet received their full issue of clothing, due in part to inability to fit the men with their proper size, particularly in shoes, and in part to inability of clothing and shoe factories to meet the suddenly expanded demand for army equipment.

On the day I visited the camp only 130 men of the division were in the hospital, which is not many out of a city of 12,500 population, especially when it is understood that in the army every suspicious case is immediately hospitalized whereas in civilian life most of these cases would be treated in the homes or the men would continue about their usual activities with slight colds or a touch of tonsillitis.

Major John W. Beard, veteran chaplain of the 162nd Oregon regiment, whose experience with the troops of the Oregon national guard dates back to pre-World War days told me that he had never seen a time when the morale of the troops was so high as it is now.

Most encouraging to one who has been privileged to live with the troops in camp during the past four annual maneuvers was the attitude of the enlisted men. While there was some dissatisfaction as is only natural in an army and under the circumstances, the men were, generally not only uncomplaining but highly appreciative of their treatment and of the improvements being made in the camp for their comfort and convenience.

Oregon is seemingly short of skill-labor available for employment in defense industries, according to Otto R. Hartwig, vice chairman of the state board for the mobilization of labor. With good prospects for the location of some of these new industries in the Bonneville power area on both sides of the Columbia river this new board is now engaged in a survey of the labor situation throughout the state in an effort to discover just where skilled men are available and the nature of their skills.

The state liquor commission has outgrown its present headquarters in Portland and expects to move into larger quarters following the expiration of its present lease in May, the Liquor Commission Board told Governor Sprague at a conference here this week. Liquor control policies were discussed with the governor during the conference.

Possibility of a reorganization of the parole set up at the state training school for boys is seen here following a report by Budget Director David Eccles describing the present system as "a mess." Governor Sprague at a meeting of the board of control this week suggested that the parole staff at the school be reorganized rather than place the institution's parole functions under the state parole board which now exercises jurisdiction over inmates of the state prison.

If what the state game commission wants to acquire lake bed lands in Summer lake it will have to double its offer of $5 an acre. The state land board at a meeting this week set the price of this land at $10 an acre. Approximately 3100 acres are said to be involved in the deal.

State treasurer Pearson found it necessary to dip into another state funds this week for another loan of $300,000 to the Liquor Commission to finance relief needs. The loan is underwritten by an issue of liquor certificates. Liquor certificates now outstanding total $600,000 and Pearson estimates that these loans will touch $750,000 by the first of the year.

The assessed valuation of utility companies operating in Oregon increased by $1,347,125 during the past year, it was revealed by the state tax commission this week.

STATE CLUB LEADER AT CONFERENCE

The conference of Malheur 4-H club leaders held Saturday at the Boulevard grange hall should aid considerably in improving the standard of club work here, according to reports of leaders attending this event.

The morning session of the all-day conference was opened by E. M. Hauser, County club agent, who explained the purpose of the meeting and outlined the program for the day. Mr. T. B. Dun-
