IT ALL TAKES TIME—Industrial production is really going places now that it is being given the "green light" in our national defense program. Its current activity stands in marked contrast to the period of four months when political dalliers were supposed to do their part of the job.

But, even as planes and tanks and the rest of our armaments are beginning to roll off the assembly lines, it is wise to remember again the tremendous task that faces industry. The complexity attached to turning out a single finished piece of war equipment is truly staggering. Naturally it takes time for industry to do this work and do it well. A few facts will give some indication of the problems involved:

There are about 78,000 rivets just in the fuselage of a pursuit plane.

There are 6,000 separate parts in an airplane engine, many of them of more than hairbreadth precision.

In some cases, there are more than 500 subcontractors involved in the making of a big plane.

The raw materials used in the building of a heavy bomber come from 33 states. It takes from a year to a year and a half to build an airship of this type, at a cost of about a million and a quarter dollars.

We'll have adequate armaments and the best of all types in the world, if industry is given confidence and governmental cooperation. But let's remember that industry, unlike certain of its critics, isn't accustomed to promising that it can produce rabbits out of silk hats at a moment's notice!

AN OVERDUE REALIZATION—In the midst of the tragedy of the current bombing attacks upon the great European cities there are many lessons to be learned for this peace-loving nation. One there is in particular that is likely to be neglected in favor of more dramatic but less valuable truths.

It might be well for us to ponder, three thousand miles away from the scene of these dreadful episodes, that the main intent in dropping high explosive bombs is to strike terror in the civilian population. And those who direct the raids consider they have been most successful when they hit a power plant, a gas main, a busy

COW HOLLOW

By The Happy Farmer

Now that the election is over there will be many of us glad when the hunting season is over. Perhaps then there will be nothing to disturb the comedy of the radio and the peace of our own Cow Hollow.

Of course, we have a little native comedy here in our Hollow once in a while. Sometimes someone will jump the fence of our pasture of peace. But they soon return and most of the time no damage was done.

For instance; the other day some hunters killed a big rooster pheasant in a bunch of stock near the farm house. The farmer not being at home, the farm wife took it upon herself to take the old shotgun over her arm and go down and confront them.

After giving them the kind of talking to she thought they deserved, she relieved them of their bird and returned back home.

Of course, she didn't care for the bird, but it was the idea of the affair. She had heard the shot and seen the stock dash off and the man go out and pick up the bird.

She had not seen the men sitting down across the line fence eating their lunch.

What business has a big red pheasant rooster to walk on tin front of a bunch of hunters, proudly flapping its wings and crow right in their faces. Even if he is across the fence and on a posted farm. They didn't care so much about the meat but it was the general principle of the affair.

Well, most of us farmers don't care for the birds but would rather not have our stock shot.

Some of us were for Roosevelt and some for Wilkie, but what makes a big football game worth while is for both sides to get out and really try and for the score to run pretty close clear to the end. Of course, we want our side to win, but it really doesn't make much difference. It was a big hard fought game. There was a big turn out and we have all enjoyed it.

Cow Hollow goes on about the same. Wet weather holds everything up.

Chet Sage's road is getting so wet and cut up that he can hardly get to the highway anymore.

Bill Parker is hauling sand and gravel to complete his cistern.

Versal Sessions got his hay raked that has been cut so long but it is raining again and he don't know if it is any better now that it was before. Ha ythat has been cut a week is hardly wilted yet.
