THE OREGON FARM BUREAU, ending its state convention last week heard W. R. Ogg legislative representative say that the Bureau was putting up an endless fight for farm parity.

That the farmers of this country should have to put up any fight for a parity on their products seems ridiculous. But until those in our national government, New Dealers, Democrats and Republicans alike, get the idea into their head that farming is the basis in this country of all prosperity, just so long will the farmer have to keep fighting for his rights. All the alphabetic agencies in the world are not going to help the farmer, despite so-called "payments" if he has to devote seven and a half to eight acres of wheat land to purchase a seed drill. The farmer does not object to paying a fair price for the equipment he must use, because he knows that he is lending his financial support to the high standard of living in the United States, but one cannot blame him for wondering if he is the "forgotten man." The sugar beet grower is a good example of the regulation that is gradually being forced on the American farmer, for in this field of farming, the wage scale is set by hearing with the officials of the Agricultural department, the net result of which is that the beet grower must pay top wages and then face forging competition.

Our so-called reciprocal trade agreements, somewhere along the line are actually working to the disadvantage of anything approaching farm parity. Take pears and apples—Canada slaps on a tariff of sixty-one cents per box on foreign apples, while the United States has a duty of only 15 cents per box! And to add insult to injury, Canada last year shipped into the United States, 115,000 boxes of apples, and up to November 5 of this year, 514,000 boxes of apples were allowed to come in to the American market—and not long ago a visitor in Nyssa told us that fruit growers on the Oregon coast were letting their fruit go unpicked this year because of the lack of a market that would return them enough to pay for the harvesting! The pear situation is a similar one, except that Argentine had a tariff of seventy-seven cents per bushel, and last year shipped into the United States 97,000 boxes which will, it is expected, be increased to 150,000 boxes this year. With conditions existing such as this, the American farmer MUST FIGHT, he must keep ever on the alert, through his farm organizations, the Grange, Farm Bureau or any other organization that will bring to the minds of those in Washington that the farmer must have not only parity prices for his products, but a well protected American market, for upon these two things depends the future prosperity of the United States. Illusive and indirect promises from political candidates are not going to solve the problem.
