Totem Poles Being Preserved

THE totem pole, in Alaska and in British Columbia, is the symbol of achievement among the families of Pacific Coast Indians. The art of carving and painting, with native dyes, these picturesque monuments to valor and legend, now is known to so few of the older members of the Coast tribes that both the United States and Canadian governments have taken steps to preserve all authentic totem poles. The photograph, left, shows an unusual totem pole near Ketchikan. Many other attractive and unusual totem poles are seen in Prince Rupert, Sitka, Wrangell and Skagway, on the sheltered "Inside Passage" steamship route from Vancouver. Some of the finest examples of totem pole art on the continent are seen at Kitwanga (photo of totem group) and other Indian villages along the Jasper-Prince Rupert branch of Canadian National Railways in British Columbia, while one of the best preserved totem specimens in North America stands in Jasper National Park, Alta. This beautiful Halda Raven totem pole (right) was brought to Jasper from the Queen Charlotte Islands.

Returns from South—

Mrs. Roy Perry returned to Nyssa and to their ranch near Adrian on Wednesday afternoon, making the trip by motor alone from Los Angeles. Mrs. Perry left California on Tuesday of last week and spent the week end at Silverton with Mr. Perry where he is employed in National Defense activities. Mrs. Perry expects to remain until satisfactory disposition of the ranch can be made.

Visit Parents—

Mr. and Mrs. Bertal Ostrom of home on Sunday after a weeks visit at the parental Charles Ostrom home in Nyssa.

Visits in East

Mrs. Cliff Greer left by train on Friday evening for Sterling, Colo., where she will visit with her parents and Mr. Greers father.
