SALEM—Of the 503 bills dumped into Governor Sprague's lap by the recent legislature session 486 were permitted to continue on their way to the statute books. The other 15 were cut down by the executive veto, establishing what is believed to be an all-time high record for vetoes in this state.

Of the 15 vetoed measures the most outstanding were the House measure providing for retirement of circuit and supreme court judges on $200 a month pay; the Jones bill, also a House measure, which would have permitted the sale of naturally fermented wines by the glass, and another House bill providing for a tax on dairy products to finance an advertising and marketing campaign to increase consumption of these products.

In vetoing the judges' retirement bill the governor expressed himself as opposed to the extension of this privilege to selected groups of public employees, and particularly to a group enjoying the salaries paid to judges. The Jones wine bill was disapproved by the governor as contrary to the principles of the Knox Liquor Control Act and as not desired by the people of Oregon at this time.

Other vetoed measures included bills providing for appeals from decisions of the liquor control commission; curing defective and irregular deeds and conveyances; increasing the cosmetic-therapy board from three to five members; appropriating $250 to provide a "suitable enclosure" for the bronze state seal imbedded in the floor of the capital rotunda; appropriating $52,000 for additional experimental work on arid lands in Sherman county; appropriating $5,000 to compensate Mrs. Elizabeth G. Brown for injuries sustained in a fall at the state tuberculosis hospital; protecting public employees in their pay and priority ratings while absent in military service; providing penalties for acts of sabotage; relating to changes of boundaries of school districts; receiving the old Soldiers and Sailors commission and appropriating $5,000 for its operation; including service trades under fair trades act; and relating to relocation of county roasts on or near airports.

The governor used the partial veto provision to eliminate two items totaling $20,000 from the omnibus appropriation bill and to strike out a claim allowed by Mrs. Rose Swanson for the death of her husband while in the employ of the Eastern Oregon State hospital from the sundry claims bill.

Records in the state department show that only seven measures of the 1939 legislature session were vetoed by Governor Sprague while Governor Martin vetoed only six bills of the 1937 session.

Legal minded members of the state's official family do not share the concern expressed of some commentators over the effect of the new Fourth Congressional district on state boards and commissions.

In the first place, these experts point out, although the legislative act creating the new district becomes effective next June the district itself does not become operative until the convening of the seventy-eight Congress in January, 1943. Until that time the present first district will to all intents and purposes remain intact so that there is really nothing to become disturbing over until that date, following on the heels of which the state legislature will convene and be in position to straighten out any kinks that may have been created by the new political picture.

Even though the new congressional district lines should become effective at an earlier date, it is pointed out, the three-member factor would still be controlling. The boundaries of the second and third Congressional districts remain unchanged and for the purpose of membership on boards or commissions whose membership is distributed according to Congressional districts, the boundaries of the first district as defined at the time the boards and commissions were created would still control.

First referendum move since the adjournment of the legislative session is directed against the Wallace bill closing all coast streams to commercial fishing. The referendum is sponsored by the Oregon Fish Protective association of which Dudley Turnacliiff of Agate Beach is president and Chas. F. Henne of Tidewater, secretary. The ballot title for the referendum was completed by Attorney General Van Winkle this week and petitions are now being circulated for signatures in order to place the measure on the ballot at the regular election in November, 1942.

Republican party workers are anything but happy over the appointment of M. D. Wooley, Portland social worker, as head of the Boys Training School. Although the Board of Control which exercises jurisdiction over the school, is now solidly republican for the first time in six years, Wooley, a New Deal Democrat, was selected in preference to several Republican applicants some of whom are said to have been fully as well qualified for the post as is the board's choice for the position which pays $2100 per year and "found" this latter including living quarters, meals and laundry for the superintendent's family.

Secretary of State Snell, as head of Oregon's traffic safety campaign, is jubilant over the announcement that this state placed first in its division—comprising the eleven western states—in the reduction of traffic fatalities during 1940. Out to repeat this record in 1941 Snell points out that traffic fatalities in this state were reduced by 40 percent during the first two months of this year while traffic deaths over the nation as a whole increased by 16 percent.
