Cow Hollow

By The Happy Farmer

Roy Manjey has the same affliction the old patriarch Job had. Don't know if his wife has told him to "Curse God and die," yet, or not.

Sunday afternoon some of the Chalk Butte Grangers and two or three other neighbors went in and stacked a good-sized stack of hay for Roy. Some he had cut and shocked before he went to boiling.

Elza McCum came near to getting his house burned up Sunday morning. Elza and Fred La Shouse were out milking and Helen came running out hollering fire. They ran to the house and found Fred's room all ablaze. His house is built like those of so many of the rest of us new landers. At first it was a one-room shack and then improved a little at a time here and there, but still a fine fire-trap. Just one door. The fire seemed to started in a pile of old papers in a corner, ran up the wall of old canvas stie, a relic of old days, and was getting a good start on the ceiling. It just happened that there was a tub full of water handy that Helen had filled the night before. Elza said if he had been two minutes later getting there the whole house and everything in it would of burned up. As it was, all of Fred's clothes were burned up. His suit, boots and all except what he had on. Elza says, "The only casualty was my bald head." The shed roof had been covered with tar to keep from leaking. The fire had started it to melt-good landing. He never knew it un-ton takes biggest honors with sixty bushels of wheat per acre.

The Niccum boys had the new Jay Bee feed grinder to grind three and one-half tons for Elza and a little less than two tons for Clarence. That new kind of machine (at least new to this country) sure goes through a bin of grain. Ground Elza's three and one-half tons of grain in less than an hour.

Jim Trummi started digging his spuds Monday morning. 'Tis hard to leave a crop in the field when we have put in so much work to raise it, but what is a fellow going to do with a good crop of spuds now?

George Gabriel, Lea Utter and Claud Britton have finished up stacking their second cutting hay. Clarence Niccum was ready to start stacking Tuesday. Frank Parker started cutting Monday and we all are into the swing of haying again.

Cow Hollow's portable hay derrick has temporarily suffered a wheel breakdown. Queer for a hay derrick. But this particular derrick does an awful lot of road work. All the six farmers that used it for the first cutting want it again and the seventh one who has a fine hay derrick of his own wants it for to stack sixteen acres of grain hay over the hill where he can't get his own fine derrick to it.

WILLING WORKERS MEET

The Willing Workers 4-H Club met at the Freeman Rookstool home August 1, with five members and their leader Mrs. John Ridder. In absence of their president, Vernon Maw, Lester Maw, vice president was in charge of the meeting. Each member talked on hogs and their care.

Next meeting will be at the John Ridder home August 15.
