Government ReportsThe adjustment of American life to a defense economy took on speed last week.

The Supply Priorities and Allocations Board, ruling that ships are more important than pleasure driving, rejected at least until next spring a formal application for steel plates to build a Texas-to-New York petroleum pipe line. At the same time, SPAB indicated some seamless tubing might be available for the line.

Striving to bring production up to maximum defense and essential civilian needs, SPAB charged its executive director with the task of expanding the output of every critical material. A study was launched by the Office of Production Management to increase steel from existing facilities by reducing the number of types and shapes.

CARS CURTAILED

OPM announced that December production of passenger automobiles would be curtailed 48.4 per cent below that of December, 1940, to conserve materials.

The Priorities Division arranged give defense ratings to 200,000 privately financed defense housing units. Guns and tanks and shells will not be permitted to absorb the materials essential to house the workers without whom the guns and tanks and shells cannot be made; and nondefense residences, if they compete with necessary building for supplies, must wait.

Other priority action was taken to keep present facilities of the nation in operation. Receiving this aid were public utilities, textile machines, mines, and a limited quantity of repair parts for light trucks and automobiles.
