will be more dependent upon women for the harvesting of their crops next year than ever before, it was revealed at a conference in Salem this week between representatives of grower organizations and officials of the state employment service. With the nation's armed forces and the defense industries absorbing more and more of the available man power women will be expected to take up the burden on the home front, employment officials pointed out. A committee if growers was appointed to investigate the problem of transporting helpers to the harvest fields and plans were made for a survey of women who will be available for work next summer.

Old age, alcoholism and syphilis are the three principal contributing factors to insanity according to records of the Oregon State hospital. Approximately one-fifth of the institution's male patients are there because of too much drink. Syphilis which is the principal contributing cause in approximately seven percent of the hospital's cases, has shown a decrease of approximately 50 percent in the past decade. While between 800 and 1,000 new patients are being admitted to the institution each year the population of the hospital shows only a small gain each year due to the rapid cure of many of the patients.

Representatives of the cooperative flax processing plants at Canby, Mount Angel, St. Paul and Springfield conferred with members of the state board of control this week relative to the establishment of a uniform price for flax fibre. While No. 1 fibre, which a few years ago was bringing only 37 cents a pound, is now selling at 60 cents a pound, some of the cooperatives felt that the state processors, including the state prison plant, should take advantage of the present emergency to boost the price still higher. Board of control members expressed the fear that higher prices might result in the use of flax substitutes and kill the market which has been built up for this commodity on which Oregon has a virtual monopoly in the United States.

While architects continue to push the plans for the new treatment hospital at the state institution for mentally diseased board of control members are fearful that construction of this much needed improvement may have to be postponed till labor and material prices recede from their present high level. Construction costs have advanced substantially since the legislature authorized the expenditure of $325,000 for this improvement. Only last week the board rejected all bids on a garage building for the eastern Oregon hospital at Pendleton when these were found to exceed estimated costs and a few weeks ago bids on a new cottage at the school for the blind were thrown out for the same reason.
