At The National Capital

Washington D.C., June 11—Another new shipyard is slated for Oregon. Contracts have been given for four navy boats to be constructed at a yard near Rainier. The yard has been prepared and hundreds of workers will be employed. It is said there is no housing problem at Rainier. Originally, both the navy department and the maritime commission were disposed to ignore the Columbia river as a shipbuilding area but now it is one of the principal shipbuilding districts in the United States. Shipbuilding on the Columbia (which includes Portland) and on the coast will provide employment for approximately two years.

Union Pacific railroad is anxious to abandon its branch line to Brogan in central Oregon. Shippers on the line have written to Washington requesting that 100 refuse permission. Railroads are so hard pressed for locomotives and freight cars that they are trying to abandon short branches in the west in order to use the rolling stock on the main line. In the early days of the war the railroads had a high priority on materials for cars but before they could acquire all the materials needed other war demands came and the building program was slowed down. Railroads have also lost considerable freight cars and engines as these have been shipped overseas to places where American army engineers are building railroads from supply bases. No large amount of equipment is involved in the Brogan branch but, small as it is, the railroad has other use for it.

After battling around in congress for years the house has passed an act permitting the Plutes and Snake Indians, who were on the old reservation in Malheur county, to sue in the court of claims for what they contend is damages for being ousted. Members of these bands, now living in Idaho, Nevada and Washington, are included in the act. One session the senate would pass the bill and it would be rejected by the house, then at another session the house would pass the bill and the senate would find fault with it. Now it appears that the bill will become a law. The Malheur Indians remember that the Klamath Indians won several million dollars (and collected), and they want to recover on their own claim.

action. The White cantonment at Medford and the Adair cantonment at Corvallis will each require an estimated 70,000 tons of coal to keep warm next winter. Bids will be invited. Coos Bay coal was formerly mined and shipped by the boatload to San Francisco, colliers doing a regular business with this fuel. Coos Bay mines are closer to the two cantonments than any other coal operation in the northwest.

Oregon canned salmon—chinook—is probably off the market for the duration. The war department has informed the packers to hold all of their canned fish until the army has been provided for. After the army, the lend-lease comes in and wants salmon. Between the two, a can of salmon will in all probability be a rarity on the shelves of dealers. The salmon pack in Alaska will be reduced to a minimum as the navy has ordered all packers out of Bristol Bay and is permitting fishing only on the southwest coast where the pack is never large. There is no regulation, however, against a civilian purchasing a whole salmon, or catching one yet.

There will be a tremendous loss of fruit and vegetables in Oregon this year unless dehydrating plants come to the rescue. There are more than 200 such plants of varying capacity in that state. Cannaries are short on tin and cannot accept all the fruit offered—prunes, for example—and dehydration is the only way to save the surplus. WPB is refusing to break its rule of strict regulation of tin for the canneries and confesses this will lead to waste. On the other hand, the government says it will buy all the dehydrated vegetables and fruit it is offered.

Director of AAA announces that the seed dealers of Oregon can have a profit of $18 a ton on hairy vetch and $16 a ton on Austrian winter peas. If the dealers want a higher profit the only way they can get it, says AAA, is for producers in Oregon (about 400,000 acres) to accept a lower price for their seed or for planters of the southern states to pay more. Triple A considers that the profit indicated is very good. A WPA project has been approved for improving the water system at La Grande; cost $9,647. However, scarcity of metal will delay the work until after the war.

Bank Loans Are Still Available

Land bank commissioner loans will continue to be available to farmers and ranchers of Malheur county under terms of legislation signed last week by President Roosevelt.

Herbert J. Davis, secretary-treasurer of the Malheur County National Farm Loan association, announced this week. Original authorization for these loans expired June 1.

Land bank commissioner loans usually are written as second mortgage loans in connection with federal land bank loans, thus permitting loans of as much as 75 percent of the appraised agricultural value of farms where that much credit is needed and is justified by the security. Under certain conditions, they may also be written as first mortgage loans.

The interest rate on land bank commissioner loans is 5 per cent, and the usual term of the loan is 20 years, semi-annual payments on the principal retiring the loan by the end of its term.

"Originally authorized in 1933 as an emergency measure," Davis said, "commissioner loans have filled a real need in farm financing. They have enabled thousands of farmers to consolidate indebtedness at lower rates of interest and begin to make progress in getting out of debt. They have helped many tenants become farm owners. And of course, during the depression, they made it possible for thousands of farmers to keep farms they otherwise would have lost if such loans had not been available."
