"I Learned about LIGHT in a BLACKOUT!"

"Our first practice blackout brought the war close to home. But warmth and reassurance returned, when we switched on the lights. I realized then that the dime a day we spend for electricity is just about the best investment my family makes."

The reasons why electric service is so cheap and so dependable go back to the way America works—a way we're all fighting for now: A way of life in which free men have an opportunity to create and produce and succeed in proportion to their individual contributions.

Like other American industries, the electric industry grew that way—steadily making more jobs, serving more people, and lowering rates—under efficient business management. Because it has done its work so well, America has the greatest pool of electric power in the world—power to produce planes, tanks and ships in crushing quantities—power that promises a PERMANENT BLACKOUT for Hitler and Hirohito!
