At The National Capital

By John W. Kelly

Washington, D. C., Jan. 21--A reader of this column, a farmer, is not impressed with Mr. Roosevelt's idea that a 40-hour week is about enough for a working man in a war industry, although 48 is O.K. if time and a half is paid. The farmer writes that he and most of his neighbors put in 98 hours a week, and the president is not suggesting that they knock off work when they feel fatigue. The writer says he has a farm with dairy cows. He is up at 5:30, has to milk his cows and do chores until evening, then milk the cows again and if he is through by 7:30 he considers himself lucky. His night milking is done by electric light and because of the dimout regulations he has had to cover all cracks in the barn to prevent a ray of light from being seen outside or be subject to reprimand or worse from the air raid wardens. There is no day off for the dairyman; it is a seven day week. In view of this constant labor the farmer says he is not in sympathy with the wartime worker who must have his relaxation periods, and doubts whether the boys from Washington and Oregon, the old 41st division who are battling the Japs are ordered by their commanders to cease firing

How To Prolong the Life of Your Electric Washer

Your electric washer is a sturdily-built machine. Like other mechanical equipment it requires reasonable care and adjustment.

You can provide that care and keep it in good working order by following these few simple rules:

- Be careful to turn in buttons, snaps or zippers. They gouge rubber from the rolls. Release pressure on rolls when not in use.
- Take good care of the cord—don't let it kink—don't let the washer roll over it—rubber cords will be hard to replace.
- Don't overload. Fill with clothes and water to the water line. When through washing leave lid loose so tub can dry thoroughly.
- Oil motor and other exposed parts according to manufacturer's instructions. Check the gear case under the tub at least once a year to make sure the grease is in good condition.
- Store washer in warm, dry place if possible, otherwise move the washer to a warm place the night before you wash.

Have your electrical dealer or serviceman give your electric washer a check-up once or twice a year. A little care and attention will add years of usefulness to your electric washer.
