Mrs. America Meets The War

There will be no wasteful use of material for trimmings on Mrs. America's dresses, blouses and neckwear for a revision of war production board order L-85 definitely sets the allowance for their use. For all women's misses' and junior misses' dresses, the trimming allowance is limited to 700 square inches of material—about one-half yard of 39 inch material—for non-transparent fabrics. The allowance for transparent fabrics is 1400 square inches or about a yard of material. From these trimmings allowances must come all material for collars, cuffs, pockets, bows, pleums, tunics, tiers aprons, overskirts, ruffles, pleating, shirring, cowls, drapes or any overlapping material in the dress.

No waiting will be necessary for Mrs. America to obtain canning sugar under the new procedure of the OPA. Stamps 15 and 16 in war ration book one are each good for five pounds of sugar to be used for canning, and these can be taken to the retailer without a trip to the local war price and rationing board. No change has been made in the rate at which sugar for canning will be made available—that is one pound for each four quarts and five pounds per person for making jams and jellies. OPA figures that the ten pounds of sugar available with stamps 15 and 16 should put up much fruit as most families can use. Only the relatively few who require more for home canning will make application to the boards.

well as adults—join the "out for the duration" group. There's no need for them since the war production board forecasts a repeat performance for wall paper styles of the 1942-43 season by forbidding the industry to manufacture any new pattern rolls containing new designs. This is one phase of the WPB conservation order aimed at providing sufficient supplies to meet actual needs. Incidentally, more than 9,000 tons of wall paper, which formerly went into sample books, now will be used to paper Mrs. America's home.

And speaking of designs, you may expect to find less variety in greeting cards for the duration. The WPB has curtailed the number of designs as well as the amount of paper stock because of material scarcity. The order will save copper and zinc used in making plates from which cards are printed and engraved. The demand for greeting cards has increased during the war, but the WPB expects to have sufficient supplies by the conservation order to meet the extra calls.

Mrs. America will notice a difference in the price which she is asked to pay for salted and unsalted butter. And here's the reason why. The OPA has authorized a price of three-fourths of a cent higher per pound for unsalted butter than for salted butter because manufacturing costs are higher.

Until rationing of heating and cooking stoves begins sometime in June, anyone needing a stove will apply to the local war production board office for a priority certificate. When rationing begins, certificates can be obtained from local war price and rationing boards on
