

Washington, D. C., June 10.—The recent indictments obtained by the district attorney of New York city against high ranking officials of the Hod Carriers and Common laborers union and the Union of Operating Engineers in all probability will reach out all the way from New York to Oregon. The indictments charge extortion and shake-down to the tune of over $700,000 from well known contracting firms and individuals by these union officials. Several Oregon contractors who have been engaged in completing contracts involving millions of dollars were not mentioned in the New York indictments because they were not within the jurisdiction of the New York district attorney. However, investigation is now going on in Oregon and it is said that the near future will bring to light some startling charges of racketeering and shake-downs.

The recent appearance of Kilsoo K. Haan, a representative of the Korean National Front federation, before a house committee at which time he further elaborated upon his warning of two years ago concerning Japan's plan to attack the Pacific coast, is nothing new to the army and navy high command. In 1941 Haan submitted to the committee detailed maps and documents showing the Japanese plan of attack on the Pacific coast. The late Homer Lee, hunchbacked soldier of fortune, who fought under Sun Yat Sen during the Chinese revolution over 20 years ago, predicted the same thing in his book written many years before Pearl Harbor. The army and navy for some time have had information which convinces them that Japan plans such an attack, but they also have reason to believe these plans have gone astray. With the island of Attu now in American hands and Kiska next on the list, the Pacific coast can feel safer from such an attack. However, token or suicide raids on our shores are always a possibility, especially if Tokyo thinks Japanese morale is bolstering up.

The Chicago Tribune is still experimenting with the chemical waste at its newspaper plant, using the Norwegian method. The experiment is to determine whether this waste can be converted into industrial alcohol, which is used for the manufacture of propellants, synthetic rubber and various other items of warfare. If the experiment is a success there are rumors of its being applied to the pulp and paper mills of the northwest, where, at present, the chemical waste is permitted to flow into streams thus increasing pollution. A senate committee investigated this alcohol-from-waste last year in a probe into the synthetic rubber situation but nothing was accomplished.

A northwest exporter has an order for 3,000,000 feet of Douglas fir in north Africa. The army controls the cables and he cannot send a message saying whether or not he will ship the lumber. He is told that all available shipping space is reserved for the army and lend-lease, and there is an economic council set up by the treasury. BEW, lend-lease army and navy which is not interested in lumber. The exporter is mad and kicking at everyone in the national capital.

War production board will probably let down the bars and permit the manufacture of passenger buses for use in the larger cities of the northwest. As the war work speeds up and employees are increased by the thousands the question of transportation becomes more difficult. Car pools and share-the-ride do not meet the situation, WPB is informed. A physician from the northwest has attempted to sell the idea to the navy of feeding the sailors vitamins extracted from the livers of soupfish sharks, insisting that it would improve the eyesight and have other good effects. The navy gave the doctor the brush-off without trying the vitamins.

Having called for dogs for the military service, war department is now asking for 30,000 pigeons of the homing variety. These birds are to be used overseas to carry messages. After a bird has learned to fly it can be taught in a few weeks to return to its cote. Homing pigeons were used in a limited way in world war one and proved to be valuable as message carriers.

A flying fortress (Boeing) costs $25,000; a medium bomber $175,000; a fighter $50,000; a twin-engine patrol bomber of the navy costs $200,000; a navy dive bomber $110,000; a navy fighter $90,000.
