CAN WE OVERCOME THE WAR JITTERS?

Will our servicemen who are serving on the war fronts and in the camps in this country return home to find a morose and sullen group of individuals warped by abnormal conditions, different probably than any generation has ever experienced in history?

Today, people are impolite and even curt to their customers and to their neighbors, they are self-centered and jittery; they are traveling at a terrific pace; failing to take proper rest and relaxation. Why? Because they are under pressure and over-worked. We are all alike. We are "in the same boat".

By our carelessness and impoliteness, we may be making business enemies that we can ill afford after the war is over, because everyone then is going to be after business and jobs and what-not and not trying to avoid them. In this matter of service we should look to the future and see in our present circumstances an opportunity to build friendships that will last after the war.

People aren't complaining, but are accepting their lots without grumbling. However, they are allowing the pressure to do them more harm than the complaining would.

Each one of us should make a conscientious effort to render better individual and community service more graciously, gain all of the relaxation and enjoyment possible and think continually of the terrible conditions under which people are laboring in European nations and other foreign countries.

Each individual will find that responsibility for his emergence from this economic and social upheaval rests entirely upon his own shoulders. He alone can prevent a crack-up, because his friends and relatives are struggling against similar problems.

Gate City Dairy

Washington, D. C. Nov. 4.—There has been considerable talk out in the northwest of late concerning the purchase of a certain eastern distillery, lock, stock and barrel. The purchaser would be the liquor commission either of Oregon or Washington. Besides buying the distillery, they would get around half a million cases of whiskey, now in the distillery warehouse, for thirsty customers. However, nothing has been said about a plan that has been in the asking for the last two months to build and operate a good sized distillery in the northwest.

For some time a couple of scouts, well known in the distillery industry, have been looking over several spots in the northwest. There are only two liquor distilleries in the whole west, both in California. Prior to the war one of the California distilleries, located in the bay section, imported corn from the Argentine, which was cheaper than Iowa corn plus the long haul. The northwest grows very little corn, as compared with Iowa, Illinois, etc. However, a large amount of whiskey is distilled each year from grain other than corn. A good share of the rye and barley crops in certain sections of the east went their way to the distilleries. The northwest produces a big barely crop of excellent quality, and furthermore pure water, an essential in making whiskey, is found in abundance in Washington and Oregon.

The possibilities offered in the northwest have impressed these two scouts, who represent large eastern distillery interests. However, the contemplated project cannot be undertaken at this time because of the war, priorities, etc. But it will be a postwar project if everything goes as per program. Washington will probably get the plant, as against Oregon, because of the checking done on the question of possible prohibition, say the scouts. They figure Oregon a much better chance to vote dry than Washington if the issue ever comes up, and eventually they know it will.

The politically wise man, and especially those who are pro-Willkie, were not at all pleased with the recent blurb from Mr. Willkie, who is quoted as having said, "I can get the Republican nomination if I want it." The politicians are firmly of the opinion Mr. Willkie is taking altogether too much for granted, and even if he could capture the nomination, he shouldn't have made such a statement. The public have always taken a delight in snapping down the ears of those who take too much for granted. The railbirds say the psychological reaction of such a statement from anyone in public life is always bad. Mr. Willkie should be more of the shrinking violet type in re-convention votes at this early stage of the game and build up a demand for this nomination, instead of telling the word "it's in the bag," say the boys who have been watching them come and go for years.

A mighty sweet fight is in the offing when the senate starts debating the Connally resolution "for a lasting peace and all that stuff and things", come war's end. This is the resolution the senate substituted for the Fulbright concurrent resolution which passed the house by an overwhelming vote only to be pigeon-holed by the togamens, who are now trotting out their own idea of such a resolution. The house members are still hopping mad over the way the senate treated their resolution, as this column told you several weeks ago. However, the togamens don't have to worry about that because theirs is not a concurrent resolution and the house has nothing to say about it. Many of the senators are dead set against the Connally resolution as written. They complain it says a lot of nothing, and the liberals intend to give it a face lifting before it comes to a vote.

Cloakroom gossip has it that Washington's Senator Homer T. Bone will not be a candidate for re-election because of illness. The senator has been ailing for some time and his friends believe he will retire from public life, come January, 1945. If such is the case, it will throw a different light on the political situation in Washington. It is known that several Democrats are aspirants for Bone's seat, should he retire, and they have been try-

Ontario Plane Field Finished

Ontario, Nov. 4 (Special)—Airport construction and maintenance engineers from the Seattle office of the civil aeronautics authority formally inspected the construction work on the Ontario municipal airport last Friday and indicated to city officials they would recommend acceptance of the project. Offices open here during the construction period were closed by them.

Completion of the work gives Ontario one of the finest municipal airports in Oregon. Rated as a class three port, it will handle the largest ship now in practical use.

Work approved by the engineers included paving, fencing and finishing. The entire property is now enclosed in a wire fence.

Lights for night flying have not been installed but this work was never included in the construction project. However most of the material necessary for the lights is on hand, and engineers indicated the installation would take place within the next several months.

Military restrictions prohibit the publishing of exact lengths of the runways. However they are of sufficient length to handle commercial air traffic that is expected to develop in the decade following the close of the war.
