that he failed to recognize anyone from the Pacific coast. As a matter of fact, not a single member of the committee is from a state farther west than Iowa and the only states represented are Texas, Georgia, Kentucky, Iowa, Wisconsin, Michigan, Maine and Vermont. The great plains, Rocky mountain area and the Pacific coast were completely ignored by the senate powers that be. No protest against this top-sided committee was made in the senate, but when news of its appointment reached the house a long and loud wall went up, not only because such vast sections of the country were unrepresented but also because the house of representatives was ignored in the composition of the body which will have a voice in post-war planning and determination of American foreign policy after the war. Representative Mundt of South Dakota was especially critical in his comments on the senate action and he gave notice that he intended to introduce a resolution providing for the appointment of eight members of the house to serve with the senate committee — four Republicans and four Democrats — and that on this committee the plains states, the Rocky mountain area and the Pacific coast should be represented.

Resentment over the action of the senate has given encouragement to house members who for many months have been demanding that both branches of the congress should have a voice in the ratification of treaties, and immediate steps will be taken to bring about this equality of authority. It can only be done, of course, by a constitutional amendment, and this is the procedure which will be followed. Nothing can be done in this matter in time to affect ratification of treaties growing out of the present war, but house members are determined that they shall have a voice in planning for post-war conditions and advising on foreign policies, insofar as such matters may be influenced by an advisory committee.

On the theory that social and economic views are influenced by geographical location and that all sections of the county should be represented on the U.S. supreme court, Representative Gossett of Texas has introduced a bill in the house providing that hereafter at least three members of the high court shall be from states west of the Mississippi river and at least two from the 10 states commonly referred to as the Old South. Mr. Gossett believes that residents of the industrialized east are more likely to hold social and economic views in conflict with the thoughts and aspirations of the south and west. There is not believed to be much prospect that the measure can win any considerable support. One reason why it became necessary for OPA to remove rationing restrictions on meat, with two exceptions, is OPA's order freezing the sale of corn, according to expressions of opinion in the house. It was stated that feeders in the midwest are rushing hogs and poultry to market because they are unable to buy feed and that the animals and fowls must be sold at once or die of starvation. The spectacle of trucks being backed up for miles waiting to unload hogs at the East St. Louis stockyards was described by one member and it was asserted that this situation exists all over the mid-west. Any thousands of these hogs are not ready for marketing, it was declared, but scarcity of feed forces their immediate sale.

Everyone who has worked will be entitled to compensation after the war under SR 1823, introduced by Senator Kilgore, Shipyard workers and all others who are demobilized from civilian jobs will be entitled to 52 weeks of compensation at a maximum of $35 a week if they have three dependents. The minimum (no dependents) is $20 a week. The payments are far higher than the maximum unemployment benefits of either Washington or Oregon and for a longer period. Unemployment compensation does not apply to agricultural workers and a few other classes, but this Kilgore bill would embrace all who have worked. As the bill now reads the thousands of Mexican laborers who have been imported into the Pacific northwest would be entitled to benefits for 52 weeks. The Mexicans are not in "covered" employment at present, being agricultural workers. The measure is essentially political and is a bid for votes in an election year.
