Washington, D. C., Aug. 31--Careful tabulation of bills passed or pending in the present congress, aside from direct appropriations for the war effort, shows the astounding total of fifty billion dollars in annual expenditure unless the proposed amounts are cut down or the measures are rejected outright. As the situation stands at the present time, with the appropriations made or authorized, the annual government expenditure is approximately twenty billion dollars, exclusive of the cost of the war. No peacetime tax system has yet been proposed which will bring in this amount of revenue.

Government revenues from taxation as of the present approximate $45,000,000,000 but this is on the basis of a national income of about $150,000,000,000. It is not contemplated by anyone that the post-war income of the federal government can have any such basis, and there is the practical certainty that a demand for tax reduction will follow shortly after the cessation of hostilities. These reductions cannot be made as soon as the war ends, of course, but the demand cannot long be ignored. It is, however, the considered opinion of government officials that tax rates must be maintained sufficiently high to bring in approximately $20,000,000,000 a year for an indefinite period in the future.

Under the most favorable of conditions, it is estimated that the post-war national income may reach $120,000,000,000 and on this basis an annual revenue of twenty billion will necessitate a higher rate of taxation than has ever been imposed in the United States in other than war time. The only alternative would be continued borrowing in sufficient amounts to make up the difference between income and outgo. This, with a war debt already approaching the $300,000,000,000 mark, would invite an economic condition bordering on bankruptcy, according to arguments by senators who are opposing legislation which would make further inroads on the treasury.

It was the presentation of these facts, together with the inherent unsoundness of the measure, which resulted in defeat of the Kilgore-Murray bill in the senate, and it is believed they will have a deterrent effect in the house.

Latest demand for removal of the ban against orientals has come from an organization of India farmers in central California which claims to speak for members of their race in California, Texas, Arizona and Washington. In a letter read to the senate they ask passage of senate bill 1595 which would permit the naturalization of 3,000 natives of India now in the United States. The letter points to the fact that their people are fighting with the allies in the various theaters of war and that the ban against them is discriminatory and unjust. They do not ask that the bars be let down to permit unrestricted immigration of others from India.

There is still doubt in the minds of many observers as to the significance of a vote in the senate during consideration of the reconversion bill which, on the face of it, would seem to place a majority of the senators as being opposed to further restrictions on immigration. The vote came on an amendment offered by Senator Reynolds of North Carolina which reads as follows: "After the date of enactment of this act, and until the expiration of five years after the termination of the present war as proclaimed by the president, no immigrant visa shall be issued to any immigrant. 2 Adoption of this amendment would have the effect of abolishing the quota system entirely an arbitrarily forbid the entry into the United States of anyone not already a citizen. There was almost no discussion of the measure and no roll call, but it was rejected by an overwhelming vote.

An indication of the opposition which may be expected in the senate to acceptance of the international monetary agreement reached at Bretton Woods is contained in a letter written to President Roosevelt and signed by 26 senators, including Senators Cordon and Holman of Oregon and Walgren of Washington. Objection to the agreement is based on its alleged failure to recognize silver on a parity with gold in defining the obligation which shall be assumed by the several nations in establishing the stabilization fund. While the list of signatories includes senators who have heretofore steadfastly advocated the re-monetization of silver, it also contains the names of several who have not hitherto been identified with that movement and opens the prospect that a two-thirds majority for ratification of the agreement is less than bright. As a matter of fact, it is not now believed the Bretton Woods agreement can be put over in its present form.

After the War What Then?

Mr. Business Man, let's talk about you. After the war, when the peace is won, will you be remembered? Or will you be one of those who joined the "fade-outs" of the last war.....those concerns which found business so good they believed it unnecessary to advertise, or, because of limited merchandise believed they could not afford to advertise?

Be sure you will not be lost to the public, or, rather.....be sure that the buying public will not be lost to you.... when the fight is won and the world returns to normalcy. Keep your firm name and your line of merchandise in the public eye for the duration. We all are limited in the amount of merchandise we can buy and sell, limited in the service we can render, but none of us can afford to be forgotten after the war because of these temporary situations.

Perhaps, because of these war conditions, your advertising program must be somewhat curtailed; perhaps you won't have as much merchandise to advertise; perhaps you will be forced to resort to institutional copy, but if you do business with people in this trade territory, be sure you will be remembered by advertising regularly in the
