"Sugar Saving With A Smile"

When sugar rationing first started, Mrs. Homemaker was lukewarm about sugar saving recipes, but let her mention to her friends now about having a "good recipe which uses no sugar and she's the most popular lady in the block. Brownies have always been a special treat and still are if we have the sugar. A sugarless Brownie recipe should be the answer to many a "sugarless" household's baking problem, and here it is.

"SUGARLESS BROWNIES"

- 1/2 cup shortening.
  - 2 sq. unsweetened chocolate. (melted)
  - 1/4 tsp salt.
  - 3/4 cup chopped nuts.
  - 1 cup white corn syrup.
  - 3/4 cup sifted cake flour.
  - 1/4 tsp. baking powder.
  - 2 eggs well beaten.
- Work shortening with spoon until fluffy and creamy. Then add corn syrup gradually while continuing to work with spoon until light. Stir in melted chocolate. Sift together dry ingredients and add 1/2 of them while heating mixture with spoon. Add well beaten eggs, then rest of dry ingredients and nuts. Turn into greased 9x9x3 pan--bake in moderate oven of 350 degrees about 35 minutes, or until done. Cut in squares with sharp knife.

Telephone Firm To Extend Lines

The Malheur Home Telephone company is ready to resume its program of expanding telephone service to farm families in Malheur county as soon as the needs of war release the necessary manpower and materials, according to C. M. Robertson, manager of the company.

"The Malheur company has always been deeply interested in securing as wide a farm telephone development as possible," said Robertson.

"During the depression many rural telephone users gave up their service just as many city users did, so that at the depth of the depression we were serving only a comparatively small number of subscribers. However, in 1945 we have more than twice the number of rural stations we had in the low point of the depression, and the highest point in the history of the company.

Transportation to Tokyo

(U. S. Marine Corps Photos)

"Rationing" of a sort has hit even out in the Marianas, for while Marine Platoon Sgt. John T. Mills (left, top photo) of Augusta, Ga., and Sgt. William H. Jacobson of Oakland, Cal., have a Jap sedan and Jap gasoline, there just isn't anywhere to go on their island base. The Leathernecks captured this Hitachi Six, slightly perforated by shrapnel, soon after the invasion of the Marianas and put the car back into running order. But they do their touring on the floating board. Seven sailors (lower photo) from a U. S. Navy repair ship succeeded in astounding "stockproof" Marines by bringing ashore the first civilian automobile to land in the Marshalls. Technical Sgt. James H. Flynn (left) of Belmont, Mass., scratches his head in wonderment and is joined by Marine Capt. Leo J. McLoskey of Monmouth, Ill. The bluejackets said they want their own transportation "so we can see all the sights in Tokyo."

"In cases where a farmer or rancher, or group of them together, prefer to build their own telephone line, the Malheur company arrange to connect them at the city limits with a circuit into our central office; this for a nominal switching charge.

"Rural telephone service is more highly developed in the United States than in any other country in the world. More than one-half million miles of telephone pole lines serving rural areas have been built in this country and by extensions of existing lines more than two-thirds of all rural families in the United States can be served from lines already constructed.

"Surveys are now being conducted to get an accurate measure of the problems ahead after the war in extending service further, as well as the best ways to do the job.

"The Bell Telephone laboratories, research organization for the Bell system, studied farm telephone service intensively for many years before Pearl Harbor, since which time practically all its energies have been diverted to war projects for the army and navy.

"One promising new device which the Bell laboratories has studied since 1938 is 'rural telephone carrier.' It is particularly promising for families close to power lines, but distant from telephone lines, as it permits putting telephone conversations on power lines. In connection with the use of carrier the Malheur company expects to cooperate with the rural electrification administration and with privately owned companies in its territory.

"Another means of extending rural telephone service is the use of a newly developed high-strength steel wire for telephone lines.

"The Bell laboratories has also studied the possibilities of microwave radio systems in rural telephone service, especially to farm families at remote points.

"Another part of the telephone company's post-war program has to do with improved transmission. The latest and most efficient types of telephone transmitters in rural as well as in urban service as they have become available and many rural telephones are already equipped with them. The number will be rapidly increased after the war. Also the number of subscribers per line, which because of wartime limitations has in some cases become greater than seems desirable for normal times will be reduced.

"To continue the studies and surveys now going on," Robertson concluded, "which will prepare us for the Malheur company expects for the resumption of our farm program as soon as victory releases the manpower and materials needed for this big job. For the entire Bell system the rural program in the immediate post-war years is expected to involve $100,000,000. Obviously such a program will provide work on their return for a large part of the 60,000 men from the Bell system who are now serving in the United States army and navy in this country and on a score of battlefronts."
