FINGERLING TROUT RELEASED IN COUNTY

Development of fishing possibilities of the close-in streams of Malheur county was begun recently with the releasing of more than 33,000 fingerling trout in drain ditches, according to Ted Berreth, president of the Malheur Game League, sponsor of the project.

A driver of the Oregon fish and game department has delivered and released two loads of approximately 16,800 fish each, and is expected to make the third trip in the near future, Berreth said.

C. A. Lockwood, fish propagation specialist of the state fish and game department, made a survey of stocking possibilities of the smaller streams and drain ditches on a visit to Malheur county in May and pronounced some of the streams as ideal trout waters.

The Rainbow trout average about two and one-half inches in length. Sixty thousand are expected to be released in the county this year, Berreth said. He just returned from Portland, where he conferred with game department officials on furtherance of fish and game improvement here as a continuous project.

Berreth also announced that Horace L. Arment has been appointed as secretary-treasurer of the Malheur Game League to succeed Charles P. Flegel.

GOOD FOOD HABITS HELD IMPORTANT

Good food habits are as important to good nutrition as good nutrition is to buoyant health. For unless a child learns to eat a variety of foods early in life, food prejudices may easily result in malnutrition, states Mrs. Irene N. Makinson, chairman of the Malheur county nutrition committee.

"So, no matter how well a mother keeps up on advances in nutrition, or how much time she spends juggling money and ration points, she still won't have well-nourished children if they refuse to eat. And unfortunately many children are not naturally fond of all kinds of food.

"The idea, then, is to help children learn to like a variety of food when they are very young. And this sort of teaching pays big dividends, for poor food habits, even when corrected in later years, may result in serious physical defects in childhood that carry over into maturity.

"In starting a child off on good eating habits, there is no single rule that will work for all children. The important thing is to start early in the child's life to acquaint him with a variety of flavors and textures.

"Meal-time should be made pleasant and should not include talk about a child's food likes and dislikes. Punishment at meal-time seldom creates good food habits. Setting a good example by at least not mentioning food dislikes is important. Adults have been known to say, thoughtlessly: 'No greens for me please. I leave grass for cows.'

Be sure that a new food is well-prepared the first time it is served, and offer only a small amount. If the child doesn't like it, there is no point in forcing him to eat it. Try it again another time and when he becomes accustomed to the new flavor, he probably will accept the new food and be willing to try other new foods.

"Too many sweets between meals or early in the meal take the edge off the appetite for body-building foods. For active children who always have a good appetite there is no harm in a wholesome afternoon snack for extra energy or play until the evening meal.

"Also it's bad business to coax or force a child to eat when he has a slight cold or other illness which may temporarily decrease his appetite. If an illness continues over a long period, a new start in good food habits may be necessary. Offer extremely small portions and simply take the food away if it isn't eaten. This will create more interest in eating than all the scoldings or coaxing a mother can use.

"If your child eats a wide variety of foods eagerly, a large part of the battle for his future health is won. Nutritionists know that if children get an early start on their good food habits, says Mrs. Makinson, they'll probably grow up with healthy appetites that demand well-balanced diets."

Native Chief Takes to Air

Chief Mok, Micronesian head man of a Pacific island, has much to tell his people, for he recently had an airplane ride. The chief looks slightly apprehensive as a parachute is fitted to him by Marine Pfc. Raymond N. Bleser of Janesville, Wis. Looking on is Marine Maj. Leonard Dowell, III, of Santa Barbara, Cal., commanding officer of the "Red Devil" Torpedo Bomber Squadron, who piloted the plane in which the chief was a passenger. In the lower photo, Chief Mok's relief was evident after the plane returned to the field and the radio gunner's compartment door was swung open. The chief is wearing Marine clothing which replaced his usual lap-lap, a native wrap-around skirt.
