INCREASE SHOWN IN OREGON'S TRAFFIC

Substantial increases in traffic volumes on Oregon highways, subsequent to the end of gasoline rationing, were reported today by Secretary of State Robert S. Farrell. Farrell pointed to the increase in volume and the higher traffic pace as two vital reasons for the exercise of greater care while driving Oregon highways.

Traffic volume recorders, maintained by the state highway department, showed that the number of vehicles counted for the week of August 12-18 totaled 36,978, compared to a total of 29,331 vehicles counted during the preceding week. This is an increase of 26 per cent, Farrell said.

"Congestion plus speed are two all-important factors in exposure to accidents on our highways," Farrell declared. "When these two factors increase, the exposure naturally increases too. Therefore, unless drivers exercise proportional care, the number of traffic fatalities may show tragic increases."

The day-by-day volume trend for the two weeks was as follows: Sunday, August 12, eleven percent over Sunday, August 5; Monday, down one per cent; Tuesday, up 12 per cent; Wednesday, up 42 per cent; Thursday, up 40 per cent; Friday, up 27 per cent; Saturday, up 25 per cent.

"Many drivers will be unused to heavy congestion on rural highways and their judgment of the speed of approaching cars and the rate at which intervening distances are being reduced may not be accurate," Farrell said. "An important additional factor is the condition of the vehicles themselves. Many will have poor tires which may not be able to stand sustained speeds. Obviously, unless drivers adapt their driving practices to the new conditions, we may expect a serious wave of accidents in Oregon. But by holding speeds to a reasonable pace; by avoiding such dangerous practices as passing on curves and while approaching hill crests; by considering the rights of the other drivers, we can meet this situation without increasing our fatality rate."

EXPERT SUGGESTS USE OF TOMATOES

"There is no time like the present for using tomatoes. And that will be just as true in the middle of next winter when you reach for a can or jar of tomatoes from your cellar shelf as it is now when you can have luscious, red, vine-ripened ones," states Mrs. Irene N. Makinson, Chairman of the Malheur county nutrition committee.

"Favorites because of their flavor and color, tomatoes have long been recognized as a source of vitamin C anytime or anyway you eat them. Cooked or canned they retain most of their vitamin C because the natural acidity of the tomato guards vitamin C content from destruction. A five-ounce glass of tomato juice gives you about 1/3 of the vitamin C you need for the day, and about 1/5 of your vitamin A needs. A small tomato or half-cup serving of cooked or canned tomatoes will provide the same amounts of these vitamins.

While fresh tomatoes are available try broiling them. Cut in half, seasoned, brushed with melted fat, and perhaps sprinkled with fine bread crumbs, they make a tasty dish. Or bake them plain or stuffed. Or serve them in one of a dozen or so salads that your family will enjoy more because the tomatoes are there. Sliced plain they're a fine addition to a cold plate.

"As for hot dishes, try diced cucumbers simmered in well-seasoned tomatoes; corn cut from the cob and stewed with tomatoes; lima beans and tomato casserole. Include them in a meat and vegetable stew. Try using them to smother beef or pork liver, or one of the less tender cuts of meat, and serve this mixture over rice or potatoes.

"Other suggested ways of serving tomatoes may be found in the leaflet 'Tomatoes on Your Table' which may be obtained from your Nutrition Chairman at the Farm Security Administration Office in the Wilson building, Ontario.

Since the tomato is a good mixer at mealtime, be sure you are 'putting up' all you can during the next few weeks. It is unlikely you'll be able to get as many canned tomatoes from your grocer's shelves as you need, so plan now to depend on your own shelves.

It's tomato time all the time—eat them up and put them up!"

Returns From Portland—
Pay Price has returned from Portland. She accompanied her sister to Portland and spent two weeks visiting there.

Visit At Unity—
Mr. and Mrs. Ed Price and family, Mr. and Mrs. Ira Price and or so salads that your family will enjoy more because the tomatoes are there. Sliced plain they're recently in Unity.

BUILDING PRICES ARE UNDER CONTROL

With the release of restrictions on construction of residences and other buildings, OPA points out the increased importance of price controls in building construction and service fields. Both services and materials must keep records of contract jobs, according to provisions of maximum price regulation 251. The same price and pricing method must be charged as was in the base period, March 1942. Certain expenses, allowed in the regulation, may be added.

Anyone who suspects that he is being overcharged should contact his local war price and rationing board at once, OPA announced.

Among types of common building services which are under price control are these: Excavation, foundation laying, building, repair and maintenance of buildings, roofing an re-roofing, plumbing, painting, papering, plastering, electrical work, insulation.

Both the cost of labor and the price of materials being installed are regulated.
