LABOR PICTURE GETS BRIGHTER IN SPOTS

The labor situation alternately brightened and darkened this week, but one of the most significant developments was the agreement reached by the Kaiser-Frazier company and the United Automobile Workers union.

Concessions made by the company will represent an increase in wages of 30 per cent, the figure that the labor unions in the automobile industry have been attempting to reach. Union leaders have rightfully declared the increase to be a great victory for them.

The labor unions will use the increase as a leverage in negotiating with the older companies, such as General Motors and Ford, because as one labor official said "If a new company can pay more than the going rate certainly the super efficient General Motors corporation can do as much and more."

Of course, the companies can pay more, but it is doubtful whether they can increase wages by 30 per cent without increasing the price of cars and so far the price has been regulated by the OPA. The manufacturers are certainly in a squeeze play that will likely extend the labor strife in that industry for some time.

Another interesting development in the labor picture was the agreement of oil refinery workers to settle for an increase of 18 per cent. These two agreements may well serve as patterns for negotiations between other groups of employers and employees.

Grangers Grow Social Crops that benefit all Oregonians

THE GRANGE and its members have been the educational and motivating spirit which has brought into being a large percentage of the more than 200 farmer-owned and operated cooperatives in Oregon. During 1944 these did a business of $105,000,000—37% of Oregon's cash farm income. Cooperative projects are as vital a part of Grange activities as better agriculture itself. That is why 28,000 progressive farmers belong to the Oregon State Grange—why membership continues to grow—why the Grange is a dominant force for social progress.

Information about the purpose and accomplishments of the Oregon State Grange is contained in a booklet "Let's Look at the Record". Contact your local Grange for copy, or write direct.
