sent. An introduction and a story about each wedding was read by Olive Thomson just before each model appeared. Few of the dresses were worn by the original wearers. "I love You Truly" was sung by Madge Thomson and Ruth Palmer. Into a picture frame stepped the first model, Lavona Grafmick, wearing a dress from 1899. It had long sleeves, with little overscap sleeves, a very high "choker" collar, and was lined in pink with a little pink ruffle just at the inside hemline. It had a front inset of pink stripe and a shoulder cape of tan with lace edge and was lined with pink. To top it off, the bride wore a hat of high crowned grey felt and fur with a large grey bird mounted at the front.

Henne, was of satin and lace of 1916 model, worn by Ruth Palmer. Mrs. Ravina Martin's dress was modeled next by Martina Nedbalek. The dress, of white net, lace, and ruffles, was from about 1920. Mrs. Kathleen Hawley modeled her own 1926 dress of blue chiffon lace and rosebuds. Olive Thompson's dress was worn by Billy Hann from a 1935 wedding. Madge Thompson's dress was modeled by Mrs. Graves, and since the wedding took place in 1936, the style looked a little more modern.

The remainder of the dresses were not so spectacular. The models were Edna Jonson in a blue lace dress, Mrs. Hawks, in a long white dress and Ruth Palmer in luggage tan suit, all of whom wore their own dresses. The latest wedding to take place was that of Mrs. Jean Blakesley in 1946. Her dress was modeled by Martha Nedbalek. Madge Thomson played a song while each gown was modeled separately, then played the wedding march while everyone came out of the frame. Lavona Grafmick took pictures of the models for all who wished them.
