COLONIAL SYSTEM DISINTEGRATING

At least three nations in the world are today engaging in armed conflict to maintain a colonial system that has been outmoded by a system of government for which those nations actually fought during the two world wars.

It is also notable that two of those countries are now ruled by democratic monarchies that developed from absolute monarchies because of the struggle of the people for more liberties. Despite the fact that the governments of England and The Netherlands are now considered democratic, they are attempting to enforce their demands upon the people of India and the Dutch East Indies. The people of those two subject nations have caught the spark of the democratic spirit and will not likely be easily subdued.

France, which has been listed in the democratic column for a long time, is again having trouble in Indo-China.

Nations with colonies are nearing the end of a long history of subjugation, misery, strife and imperialism. The colonies, dominions and other such types of nations with size and resources will not remain subject to a foreign power for many more decades.

Russia, attempting by various means to gain control of smaller nations, should take account of the situation created by foreign control of India, the East Indies and Indo-China. As the world becomes "smaller" through the medium of transmission and transportation, nations may become permanently larger, but that must come through mutual understanding and consolidation. Despite the idealism involved, consolidation of small neighbor states into larger nations with greater economic and political freedom would do much to bring about permanent world peace.

STILL RACING AGAINST TIME

Working 'round the clock, telephone equipment manufacturers are delivering more telephones, switchboards, wire, cable and other items than ever before—and they're all being put to use as fast as they come off the assembly lines. Even so, the huge backed-up demand leaves us with many unfilled orders for service in the territory we serve.

• Providing service to new customers isn't all we expect to do. We want to give every one of our present customers the kind of service he wants. Many people who have been sharing party lines will want individual lines. We'll get going on that job as soon as we get enough equipment installed but it takes time to get caught up after long years of shortages.

dent last year, Brown made a study of mechanized beet harvesting progress and possibilities in the state. Reporting on the harvesting of beets averaging 15.5 tons to the acre, Brown points out that the four harvesting combinations now used in beet fields were compared. When both the digging and loading was done by hand the cost was $1.80 a ton. Hand digging and topping with machine loading reduced the cost to $1.07 a ton. When the beets were machine dug and topped but loaded on trucks by hand the cost was $1.10 a ton. But when all of the harvesting was done by machine the cost was 97 cents a ton. This harvesting study was made on 34.5 acres on the R. T. Smith farm near Ririe, Idaho.
"Complete mechanization of beet harvesting on the 34.5 acres would have meant a saving of $538.55, or $15.50 an acre," comments Brown. Applying this figure to the 150,000 acres of beets grown in Idaho the saving would amount to $2,325,000. Applying the same per acre saving to the 1,600,000 acres of beets grown throughout the nation would mean a $24,800,000 return directly attributable to complete mechanization of harvesting.
"Rapid mechanization of sugar beet harvesting can be expected", predicts Brown, whose home is in Malad and who as a boy had considerable first-hand experience with the "stoop labor" the industry is escaping through mechanization. Brown used to hand thin beets, starting at 4 o'clock in the morning and ending at 9 o'clock at night. Three-quarters of an acre was a good day's work.

"Already most of the beets are mechanically loaded from the fields. The mechanical digger and topper is an assured success. Last year about 1400 new harvesters went to work in the nation's beet fields, many of them in Idaho. Farm machinery manufacturers have some of their best research engineers at work perfecting the machines and closely watching their field operation."

EASTERN OREGON'S PAYROLLS INCREASE

Horace Greeley's century-old advice of "Go West, Young Man" is being reversed for able-bodied Oregonians hunting for those elusive, inflated post-war wages.

Figures compiled by the state unemployment compensation commission show that record earnings now are being reported from eastern Oregon counties, where loggers and mill men are working feverishly to bring the lumber supply up to reconversion demands. Practically every one of the dozen "high wage" counties are predominantly lumber producers, but Harney, Jefferson and Wheeler lead all the rest with average monthly earnings of $387.01; $267.71; and $261.45, respectively for the first quarter of 1947. Next come the western Oregon trio of Douglas, Coos and Polk with $246.01; $245.50, and $241.81, while Crook, Tillamook, Lake, Multnomah, Linn and Columbia are well above the statewide average of $226.

The average monthly pay for about 278,000 workers (of whom 14,500 are in the lumber industry) has increased by 15.3 per cent over a year ago, and is even higher than during the war when over-time shipyard work swelled pay envelopes. First quarter wage payments by 14,000 employers were three times pre-war totals for 1939-40-41, and the average monthly check has doubled.

Every county in Oregon has bigger pay rolls than in the last year before Pearl Harbor, while two—Josephine and Douglas—report increases of 604 and 539 per cent, respectively. Linn and Jefferson have more than quadrupled wage totals, and Tillamook, Malheur, Jackson, Morrow, Umatilla, Marion, Benton and Lane have gains of more than 250 per cent. Although Multnomah is the only county with lower pay rolls than during the war, its employers paid out $96 millions in the first three months of 1947 as compared with $38 millions in 1941.
Malheur county's payrolls reported by covered employers for the first quarter of 1947 amounted to $877,738, an increase of 283.8 per cent over the first quarter of 1941 and 45.9 per cent over the same period in 1946.
