The Happy Farmer
By Clarence Niccum
Boy, did I get my foot in it when I touched on the political angle of our roads. We all can agree in cursing these roads but the political angle of it? Well that's different. Have it your own way. Maybe I would do better to scout around and try to get a little news to report. But a farmer (if I could qualify as such) hasn't much time to nose around for news. Got an interesting letter in the mail today. Of course the main reason for my liking it was that she patted me on the back a little but am going to give you some of the letter. "We hear so much of the miss deeds of the youth of today. Seldom of their good exploits. With this in mind I submit the account of a good deed by young James Stephens Jr., a lad of about 16 yrs. or so, his concerns a hive of bees that had taken living quarters in R. Alrad's mail box. Now we humans have a housing shortage but we did not know the housing shortage had also effected the bees. Well there they were firmly entrenched and could not be moved, defending their home against all enemies. Just ask Mrs. Alrad. She received several stings when she attempted to get her mail out of the box. Our little child was so badly stung when she ventured out to play that it was necessary to seek medical aid for her. "Here is how James Stephens entered the picture. He was walking by coming home from picking spuds. As he approached he was warned 'Don't go near the mailbox. It is full of bees and they are mad.' He offered to smoke them out with sulphur to destroy them. The offer was promptly accepted. "Well it did the trick, the fumes soon ended them." From one who was stung Lasarre Jones. Well Mrs. Jones business was certainly picking up for a while around your place and young James is quite well known for quick thinking. A short time ago a swarm of bees took up living quarters in the power line switch box just outside of Cleaver's door. They spent several anxious hours and several miles of driving looking for a "Good Samaritan" to remove them. They drove past James' door several times but they did not know he was a genius along those lines. Then a few days later a swarm lit to rest a while on my wood pile. And boy was I skeered stiff. It was sure thing they would not stay long on the wood pile and my house is so full of knobholes that there was a very good possibility they might decide to come in and live with me. Well I finally persuaded my brother he has had some experience with bees so to come over and put them in a box. They are still on the woodpile but in a box and no one has been daught, Janet, returned Sunday by plane from Ogden. Mrs. Larson had an operation on one of her eyes. The operation was performed by a specialist.
