BY LEW HERRIMAN

Robert Hutchins, head man at the University of Chicago, comes up with the comment that "Most Americans can't see the atom for the bomb." Reducing this to one-syllable thoughts, Mr. Hutchins means we've forgotten that the active little atom can be used for other things besides blowing people loose from their mortgages. Already atomic knowledge is being used to combat disease, to advance science and to aid industry. The University of Chicago has a 12 million dollar program of atomic research to determine the ways in which atoms can be used for the good of all mankind. That's the best news we've heard for some time.

After the Lions Club dinner, Everett Heldt says that if an atom looks any worse than a shot gun, he doesn't want to meet up with one. In Dallas a woman complained to the police that a three-year-old child kept biting her Great Dane. Probably the child was just cutting its canine teeth. If your car has been "cutting up" lately, we suggest you drive into the HERRIMAN MOTOR COMPANY for a complete check-up!
