MANUFACTURERS IN AREA ENUMERATED A field representatives of the United States bureau of the census currently are calling on manufacturers in this area to press to early completion the 1947 census of manufactures, which has been under way since January, according to Lena V. Hix, census district supervisor for the acting bureau, whose office is located at La Grande. "The current industrial canvass, which includes sawmills, and printing and publishing establishments, and which is mandatory, has been conducted by mail, and most manufacturers have responded by promptly filling their completed questionnaires," officials said. "However, some establishments have filed incomplete reports, either for lack of the detailed information requested or through misinterpretation of the census bureau for the follow-up work. "In some instances, manufacturing establishments to which questionnaires have been sent have failed to return them, usually because they have gone out of business or because they do not believe themselves to come within the scope of the census. These are being contacted by census field representatives. A check also is being made for manufacturing establishments which have not, for some reason, received a questionnaire from the census bureau.

"Any manufacturer in this area who has not received a census questionnaire should write at once to the bureau of the census, industry division, Washington, D.C.

"The volume of reports received from many sections of the country, according to word from the Washington office of the census bureau, indicates substantial shifts in industry between many areas. An increase in the number of establishments over the last census in 1940 also is indicated. As a result, changes in the rank of states in the manufacturing industry are anticipated. In 1940, which was the last time a census of manufactures was taken, Oregon had 2,248 manufacturing establishments with 63,222 wage earners, which ranked it 28th among the other states. Also, it ranked 25th then in the amount of wages paid, $77,585,546."
