NEWS VIEWS By Lew Herriman

The old days, when a Thanksgiving turkey made so many post-Thanksgiving return appearances to the family table that the mere mention of turkey-hash was enough to make most of us turn a dull green, are no more, according to government reports. Since 1934, the U. S. experimental farm in Maryland has been crossing turkeys more ways than a sailor wears a hat. Result... a 10 pound turkey designed for smaller families. The new bird is now being raised in every state. This should be great news to refugees from turkey-hash. And whether you want a small bird or not, it's good to live in a land where the government sometimes talks turkey!
