NEWS VIEWS

The new members of Congress are realizing their troubles didn't end with the election. First off, they had to find places to live, and it seems that vacancies in Washington, D. C., are harder to discover than a vegetarian at a gentlemen's convention. Next, the job-seekers began hitting them from all angles and with all angles. On top of this the freshman legislators are up to their hub caps in learning the complex routines of their new jobs. But this happens with every Congress, and somehow they catch on and they're soon able to take the bull by the horns. So let's not be too impatient.
