A million more neighbors...

Telephone service everywhere has expanded by leaps and bounds since the end of the war—and nowhere has the growth been faster than in rural areas.

The rural telephone expansion program is actually ahead of schedule, for the Bell System's five-year postwar goal of adding one million rural telephones has already been reached—in little more than three years.

Every telephone added, whether in city, town or on a farm, means one more "neighbor" for every telephone user.

It is our objective in 1949 to bring service to more and more people, not only in rural areas but everywhere—and to improve the service for all.
