"Farms Come First!"

For its entire 33 years, the Idaho Power Company has followed the policy that irrigation is more important than electric power. Only after irrigation needs have been met is water used to make electric power.

That policy—irrigation first, power second—is an important part of our $50,000,000 program of building new plants and other facilities within the next five years. This huge construction program—which is in addition to the $28,000,000 already spent since the war—is to serve the fast-growing needs of this territory. It carries out our pledge of always having power ready and waiting when needed.

Electric power development and agriculture go hand-in-hand in this area—98% of the farms in Idaho Power territory are electrified, a national record.

IDAHO POWER
A CITIZEN WHEREVER IT SERVES

Question: WHO OWNS IDAHO POWER COMPANY?

ANSWER: About 9,500 stockholders residing in every state of the union. Ninety-four per cent are individuals like yourself — 6 per cent are institutional owners such as colleges, churches, trust funds and estates. More than half live in western United States. They are thrifty people, the kind whose savings make possible most American business and industry. Idaho Power is independent of any holding company—thousands of its stockholders are also its customers.
