Prevent Spoilage of Hay and Grain By Using SAF-T-SUR MIX

Bale Your Hay 5 Hours After Cutting Without Danger of Spoiling

What Is SAF-T-SUR MIX?

SAF-T-SUR MIX is a compound mixture of ingredients gathered from many parts of the United States and is properly balanced, under chemist's supervision to help safeguard the farmer or miller "against possible loss through fire or spoilage". SAF-T-SUR MIX will help reduce loss of farm products carrying excess moisture due to improper drying, or weather.

FIELD RESEARCH

During our spring research in the field, calling on the elevator trade and farmers, the following has been noted:

1. Baled alfalfa hay, carrying excessive moisture on the outside, such as rain or dew (traces of the compound can be detected on the leaves), turning the color to dark brown and almost black in numerous places throughout the bale; although the leaves remain intact. In feeding the live stock, it has been noted that they will eat this in preference to field dried hay or hay which is air dried in the barn.
2. Wherever loose hay carrying excessive moisture, such as rain or dew, was stored in the haymow, these traces of dark brown hay did not show up as numerous as in baled hay.
3. In all cases where hay was baled or stored in the haymow, carrying excess moisture within itself, without dew or rain being present, the leaves were all intact and the color stayed the same as was at the time it was baled or stored.
4. In combined grains such as wheat, oats, barley, in fact all grains other than corn, carrying moisture above 18%, it was noted that a slight musty odor was present. After these grains were cleaned over a fanning mill, all odors disappeared. If the above grains mentioned carried 15 to 17% moisture, no musty odor was present.
5. In shelled corn, carrying moisture above 18%, it was noted that a majority of the kernels turned dark brown, but after being cleaned, these kernels turned back to their original color.

LABORATORY RESEARCH

The following is the results of comparison tests made by an independent laboratory to show that hay can be stored even with adverse weather conditions when treated with SAF-T-SUR-MIX.

Result of test made on alfalfa hay after it is completely cured out, that was carrying excessive moisture internally and externally at the time of baling.

Turned brown, appeared moldy.
Moisture	9.57%
Protein	17.06
Fat	1.40
Crude fiber	23.73

No trace of spoilage or mold was found.

It is a generally accepted fact that hay put away under the above conditions would spoil. You will note from the above results of tests made on that kind of hay, that it is possible to put wet hay in the barn, either baled or loose, and retain the feed value even though it turns brown; and it is possible to store hay with only five hours of sunshine, with no external moisture, and retain the color, pliability, and feed value. It is necessary in storing hay this way to let it completely cure out before the above results can be obtained. You will also notice that in feeding this, your livestock will prefer it to all hay that has not been treated with SAF-T-SUR MIX.

Result of test on alfalfa hay that was cut in the morning after the dew was off it, wind-rowed and left in the sun for five hours before baling.

Remained green
Moisture	9.58%
Protein	19.34
Fat	1.71
Crude fiber	25.84

No trace of spoilage or mold was found.

Through field and laboratory research, our company is continually endeavoring to play their part in safeguarding the field products of farmers.
