General Speaks Out—Of Turn

As some local residents have said this week, probably General MacArthur knows more about the military situation in the orient than President Truman, but as long as Truman sits in the white house the general will not have the last say.

Truman has never seemed to be able to impress upon his subordinates that he is the "chief" and as a result intermittently some official in Washington speaks out-of-turn, causing more confusion in the minds of everyone and giving aid and comfort to the communist hordes. When the Truman administration decides on a definite foreign policy, maybe one spokesman can speak for the United States.

The Bottom Of The Barrel

Apparently the government is about reaching the bottom of the barrel so far as further increasing income taxes in the higher brackets is concerned. Some people are reaching the point where they are paying out 95 per cent of their incomes for taxes, which does not leave very much in any man's pocketbook.

The point is that when the government reaches the limit on higher incomes, it will be forced to drop farther down the income ladder for additional revenues. That means those in the middle and lower income tax brackets will have to pay more income taxes. That is nothing to gloat about, because some of the poor devils are only making a living now, but it may be a good omen in that when the poorer classes who have been voting for the crowd in Washington begin helping to pay the bill they may change their attitude about the "something-for-nothing schemes". When the people get enough taxation, more economy will be practiced by the government.

Fruitland Oil Terminal Opened

into the new tanks marked the longest shipment to date through the pipeline, constructed during the past year from Salt Lake City to Pasco, Washington. Similar terminals at Baker and Adams, Oregon, and the terminus of the line at Pasco, Washington, are scheduled to be opened in the next three weeks.

Owned and operated by Salt Lake Pipe Line company, a Standard Oil Company of California subsidiary, the line is 8 5/8 inches in diameter for 505 miles of its length, and 6-5/8 inches in diameter for the remaining distance of 60 miles into Pasco. It represents a total of 33,000 tons of steel laid into the ground, or approximately the weight of a small aircraft carrier or heavy cruiser.

One of the first industrial uses of atomic energy in America has been established as a routine part of operations in the pipeline. Because a number of different oil products may be traveling through the line, one after another, it is necessary for operators to determine as closely as possible just where one shipment ends and the next begins. To accomplish this with the least possible blending of the two products, a fraction of an ounce of a radio-active tracer liquid is injected between, or at the "interface" of the products where they are put into the line at the refinery in Salt Lake City.

At each point where products are delivered, sensitive instruments, using Geiger counters attached to the tracer, thus signalling the operator to open the proper valves for delivery of the product into storage tanks or change the stream to another tank.

Use of the tracer has been declared "absolutely safe", with radiation amounting to much less than that emanating from an ordinary luminous watch dial.

Products carried in the line come from the Salt Lake City refinery of Salt Lake Refining company, another subsidiary of Standard.
