"Commencement" Is Here

To the high school and college graduate the word "commencement" is always given a confusing interpretation by those who have gone before.

The pupils feel that they have just completed a project, a period of life or a course and yet they receive their diplomas at "commencement". They feel they are finishing something, not commencing something. In reality, they are actually beginning their life's work and are not in a preparatory stage. Despite this interpretation of graduation, it still requires a considerable stretch of the imagination to associate graduation with commencement.

It may also seem quite a stretch of the imagination for many people to think that they are only reaching the "commencement" stage in the Malheur Memorial hospital project. The money has been raised and the building has been completed and equipped, so many will say why not sit back and enjoy it, but the hospital has not yet proved itself worthy of the community effort and the community has not yet proved itself worthy of a fine hospital.

Hospitals are not money-making institutions and the profit motive is usually far removed from such organizations, but they must either become self-sustaining or the communities in which they are located must be continually raising additional money for their operation.

At least for a few years, the hospital association may be forced to engage in a system of operation well known as deficit financing. However, people who showed such determination during the two financial campaigns can be expected to meet the challenge facing them without cringing and carry on the operation of the hospital for the benefit of everyone.

The sacrifices that may be necessary to keep the hospital in operation will tend to make residents of the community love and appreciate more the institution and the purposes for which it was established—to relieve suffering and prevent spread of disease.
