Household Worker Under Benefit Law

By Vernon A. Welo, Manager of the La Grande social security office.

Since I first wrote about household employees coming under social security next January, the bureau of old-age and survivors insurance and the bureau of internal revenue have brought out a small booklet, issued jointly and entitled "Do You Have A Maid?"

It is, I think, a model of clarity and brevity. It enables the household employer to determine quickly whether her worker comes under social security. It's back cover is an addressed and postage-free card to be torn off and mailed by those whose workers will be eligible for old age and survivors insurance. In response to this card, the employer will receive the special form and the few instructions she will need for reporting her employees' wages and for remitting the social security tax.

Not all domestic employees will be eligible for social security; consequently not all household employees will need to mail in the post card contained in the booklet. Those who have a maid not more than one day a week will not make a report on that employee. Housewives who have a household worker on at least two different days a week, however, need the report form.

I say an average of two days weekly because that would add up to at least 24 days in a three-month period. Any household employee who works for you on at least 24 different days in a calendar quarter meets the days-of-work condition for social security. They need not be full days.

If you employ a maid on 24 different days in a calendar quarter, and pay her not less than $50 in cash wages for work in that quarter, she will come under social security and you will need to have the special report form that the post card from the "Do You Have A Maid?" booklet will bring you.

The word "maid" in the title to the booklet means more than it says. It means any kind of household employee, male or female. A gardener, a governess, a chauffeur or a nursemaid will be eligible for old age and survivors insurance protection, beginning in January, whenever his work for one employer meets the 24 days-$50 cash wages conditions of the new social security.

If you have a household employee who is covered, get your copy of

"Do You Have A Maid?" It is available now at social security offices, internal revenue offices, and at post offices everywhere.
