Watch For Pests In Stored Foods, Says OSC Expert

Homemakers can save both food and money by protecting their stored foods against insect pests. Practically all dry food products on the pantry shelves are subject to attack, according to R. W. Every, extension entomologist at Oregon State college.

Red pepper, he says, is the preferred diet of the drugstore beetle. The Indian meal moth is especially fond of nuts and raisins. Any of the dried cereal products can be the happy home of several species of small beetles.

Every recommends four steps for controlling these insect pests: clean cupboards and pantry shelves thoroughly, spray the cupboard with 5 percent DDT, inspect all packages of food for insects, and, if insects are found, destroy them by heating the food in an oven at 140 degrees F. for 30 minutes.

Insects can live on food that is spilled or sifts out of packages and lodges in cracks and corners, and cleaning shelves removes this source of infestation. When food packages have been removed and the shelves cleaned, spray with the 5 percent household type of DDT. Every says. Wait until the spray dries before replacing the food.

Infestations may occur in cereals, cornstarch, macaroni, nuts, dried fruits, dog biscuits, bird seed and other dry products. If insects have been found, check particularly those items which are seldom used and have been on the shelves the longest. Every advises.

When the sources of infestation are found, discard the foods or sterilize them with heat, the entomologist says. Most dry food products can be freed of insect life by heating them in an oven 140 degrees for 30 minutes. Small packages can be heated as they are. Contents of large packages should be spread out on pie pans or baking sheets, so the heat can penetrate more easily.

Costs, Taxes Way Up: So Is Your Appetite

Everything seems to be on the increase these days.

While most folks are well aware of the rise in costs and taxes, for example few would realize that appetites are getting bigger too.

But figures compiled by OSC extension agricultural economists from federal reports show that each person will eat slightly more food this year than last and about 12 percent more food than in pre-war years.

According to latest reports, about 27 percent of the family "spendable" income goes for food today. If folks ate only the same kinds and same quantities of food as before the war, they would be spending only 19 percent, the economists say.

OSC Staff Protests Proposal of Civil Service Commission

Greatly reduced efficiency, demoralization of staff and destructive influences on the entire program of Oregon State college will be inevitable of action initiated by the state civil service commission that would place all non-teaching staff members under direct control of the commission according to President A. L. Strand.

Deans, directors and department heads representing every school and division on the OSC campus vigorously protested "any further advance in prosecuting the proposal of the civil service commission" and declared their "unwavering and unanimous" opposition to it.

The protest came at a meeting of administrative officers of the faculty after it was explained that the commission proposes to remove faculty members whose positions have traditionally—here and elsewhere—been accorded full academic status, or

About 400 members of the OSC staff, including approximately half the research staff of the agricultural experiment station and all of the extension service personnel, and smaller numbers at other institutions in the state system of higher education would be affected.

President Strand said that if the proposal is put into effect, the staff of Oregon State college "will be split wide open."

Faculty members in a resolution said the action would have a devastating effect on the morale of the staff and that the proposal displays "a lack of understanding of educational and objectives."

The answer to everyday insurance problems

By
RALPH LAWRENCE

QUESTION: Competition for the skilled craftsmen in my business is very keen. If a bad fire threw my men out of work I'm sure they'd be hired immediately by competitors and I wonder if there is any form of insurance which would guarantee my payroll in event of fire.

ANSWER: Yes there is. It is variously called "Use and Occupancy" and "Business Interruption" insurance. It is a valuable protection for a business man and you should consult your agent about it.

"If you'll address your own insurance questions to this office, we'll try to give you the correct answers and there will be no charge or obligation of any kind."
