Start Every Morning Right With Real American Breakfast

Everybody knows that for best health breakfast should provide from one-fourth to one-third of the day's food needs. And the wise menu maker knows that the best way to get the family to eat an adequate breakfast is to make it so good they can't refuse.

So breakfast should smell good, look good and taste good. Then nobody can resist it. The scent of fresh coffee and crisp bacon, the sight of sunny golden orange juice and stacks of hot-off-the-griddle pancakes, with beautiful amber-colored maple-blended syrup, is a wonderful invitation to the real American breakfast.

The realization is even better than the invitation. The quick-frozen orange juice has all the fresh flavor of sun-ripened fruit. The pancakes are light and fluffy. The bacon is broiled or fried just enough for crispness. The syrup is pleasantly warmed, so that it won't chill the pancakes. The coffee, of course, is fresh and hot—and there's milk for the children. Here's a breakfast, indeed, to start the real American off well equipped for the morning's work.

The orange juice, the new kind that does not separate on standing, can be mixed just before serving or, if more convenient, the night before. The pancakes, of course, are made of a prepared pancake ready-mix. All you have to do is add milk, mix and bake. To warm the bottle of maple-blended syrup, place it in a small pan of cold water and heat it. Serve from the original bottle. The easiest way to cook the bacon is to put it all in the skillet at one time, not piece by piece. You can separate the slices and keep them straight as they heat and cook crisp.

CHET, JOE CORFIELD LOSE LIVES

Further attempts by Magee, this time dressed in a rubber diving suit, to find the bodies came to naught when he found difficulty in staying under the water for more than half-minute intervals.

It was only after a mass of heavy timbers and one of the submerged sections of the decking were dragged down stream by two powerful caterpillar tractors that one of the bodies was found.

Grappling Hooks Used
With crudely-made grappling hooks workmen in a row boat succeeded in snarling the hook in the clothing of one of the victims, found in 13 feet of water a few feet from where the earlier diving attempts had been made.

When pulled to the gravel bar below the bridge site, the body was identified as that of Chet Corfield.

The body was found at 11:05 p. m.

2nd Body Recovered Saturday
Attempts to recover the body of the younger Corfield were given up at 12:15 a. m. After removal of the up-ended section in midstream, under which it was believed the remaining body might be pinned, grappling methods were resumed Saturday morning.

The body of Joe Corfield was recovered at 1:30 p. m. Saturday.

It was lodged on the river bed about 30 yards from where the body of Chet was recovered. It is believed it had been dragged downstream in the debris snaked out of the river the night before.

A coroner's jury, after sifting evidence Monday morning, determined that Chet died as result of hemorrhage and shock due to a crushed chest and Joe from drowning.

Coroner's Inquest Held
It was established by the coroner's jury, at the inquest held in Ontario by Malheur County Coroner George Beecher, that there was no "criminal negligence on the part of any specific person" in connection with the bridge's collapse.

It was recommended by the jurors that all work on rebuilding the bridge by the state highway department crews be suspended until satisfactory arrangements are made for a competent superintendent to be constantly on the job.

Jurors also stated that the state industrial accident commission is subject to censure for failure to inspect the job for safety measures.

It was the finding of the jurors also that there was a lack of engineering supervision during the job of rebuilding the bridge that was badly damaged in high flood waters last April, resulting in temporary supports of the sections being raised into position being improperly placed.

'3 Working Under Span

The two Corfields were working, along with Foreman Westfall, Boyd and Pollard, on a false bent beneath the last section of decking to be raised into place. They had but inches to go to bring the 32-ton section into line when the accident occurred. They were using hand jacks for this purpose.

S. W. Doane, LaGrande, another foreman who was working on another section a short distance away, said the whole bridge gave a quiver just before it collapsed. He ran to the south end of the span—reaching safety just in time.

Doane said the section that collapsed, taking two other sections with it, was the straightest and strongest of the three that went down.

"I don't understand what could have happened," he said, shaking his head. "The false bent supports must have slipped."

Westfall said the method used in repairing the bridge was a routine one. He added that in his 20 years of road construction work this is the first accident of this nature ever to occur.

World War Vets
Both of the victims were World War II veterans. Chet had been employed by the highway department for about a year, while Joe had worked for the department but a few months.

Parents Survive

They leave their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Corfield of Nyssa, five sisters and one brother.

The sisters are Mrs. Emily Meyers and Mrs. Cora Hann, Nyssa; Mrs. Viola Holmes, Portland; Mrs. Dorothy N. Pastee, Durkee, Ore., and Mrs. Carol L. Aten. The brother is Glen B. of Pendleton.

Chester was born Feb. 27, 1917, at Greybull, Wyo. He leaves his wife, Peggy, and three sons and one daughter, the children ranging in age from six to 16 years.

Joe, also born at Greybull, on Sept. 24, 1923, leaves his wife, Bonnie, and a son and two daughters, ranging in age from eight months to four years.

Double funeral services were held at 2 p. m. Tuesday at Lienkaemper funeral home, with burial at Owyhee cemetery. The Rev. Austin J. Hollingsworth officiated, assisted by the Rev. Robert Kriner, Vale.

Birthday Dinner at Caldwell

Mrs. Gordon Fouch and her grandfather, John Englebert, of Colome, S. D., were honored guests at birthday dinner given at the home of Mrs. Fouch's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Englebert, on Sunday. Other guests were Gordon Fouch and daughter, Michele.
