"Money I can depend on..."

"Before the cannery came to town, I could never tell what I was going to get for a crop until I took it to market."

"And lots of seasons my stuff was past its prime before I could find a market."

"Now, everything I grow goes to the cannery. It brings in an income that I can depend on, year after year."

The high-speed precision manufacture of modern food-containers, and the development of canning techniques for almost any food you can name, has created a world-wide market for what Oregon grows.

This has stabilized farm income, converted barren acres into productive land.

For more than fifty years, American Can Company has been helping the Oregon canning industry widen markets for Oregon fruits, vegetables and other products.

The better we as a nation produce, the stronger we grow.

Our work here—making containers and helping industry use them—is a good example of how a nationwide business can bring its services to bear at the local level, increasing income all along the line.

Who.
really owns Standard?

That old bogeyman—the Tycoon of Big Business—seems still to linger in the minds of some people. Whether or not this was ever a true picture, it is certainly false today. Standard Oil Company of California, for instance, is widely held, independent. It has its own management and shareholders. It is not connected with any of the Standard companies in the East.

The actual owners of Standard Oil Company of California now number 115,942—which is 17,000 more than just two years ago. They include 283 universities and other educational institutions; 236 churches and religious organizations; 1825 small and large businesses; 159 hospitals and other medical groups; 10,876 employees of the Company, and 102,563 other individual citizens, few of whom could be called rich. The great number of our shareholders are people like your own friends and neighbors—yourself, perhaps—mechanics, clerks, farmers, white-collar men, widows, men and women who have retired. ¶ In another sense, of course, the "owners" of the Company are our customers, who, in effect, control it and receive its benefits. You control Standard by your choice of brands. You benefit by the quality and economy of the products we sell. The only way we can look after the interests of our shareholders is by making sure that Standard serves you well.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA plans ahead to serve you better
