Malheur Farmers Asked To Return Crop Reports

Many Malheur county farmers will receive a special crop reporting form within the next few days which county extension agent Harry R. Sandquist believes should receive special attention. He says the crop report form will give local farmers a chance to show how Malheur and Oregon production this year fit into the nation's needs for farm products.

The special report form was mailed this week by Niels I. Nielsen of the crop reporting service in Portland. The county agent says it is important that the forms be filled in and returned to Nielsen's office immediately.

One of the major services of the survey, Sandquist points out, is that results will help farmers discover marketing opportunities, determine what to plant and decide when to by and sell. State and national totals will help county agents in suggesting local production adjustments where needed. The totals will be available to all farmers. Individual reports are confidential and are used only in arriving at county, state, and national totals.

school and had dinner before attending the Adrian game that night.

The survey has wide support of agricultural economists throughout the country as an index to the total production picture. M. D. Thomas, extension agricultural economist at Oregon State college, credits the survey as a valuable service to both farmers and consumers.

"With the average farmer now producing enough food and fiber for 15 persons, wrong guesses in crop planning can be costly in farm sales and consumer needs," Thomas states. The economist says preliminary estimates of Oregon's 1953 acreage and production are already available.

They are based on information obtained earlier from trade people, county agents, and from farmers who act as monthly crop reporters.

Current harvest yields, along with some shifts in earlier crop plans, make it advisable now for a more thorough check on what actually happened in 1953, according to the OSE economist.
