Fresh Oranges for Tasty Winter Salads

Winter salads are best of all when they're refreshing and tangy—good tasting and good for you, too. Plump California orange cartwheel slices spark any winter salad, are specially good when combined with other fruits. And, in addition to all that fine flavor, you get quantities of vitamin C, as well as proteotins, and other healthful nutrients found in the "meat" of whole oranges—something to remember during the cold, wet winter season.

A handsome, easy to prepare salad like the one pictured will be the center of attraction on the company or family table. Arrange cartwheel slices of California oranges in parallel rows on a big chop plate or serving platter. Tuck alternating rows of apple and banana slices between them, fringe the edges with curly leaf lettuce and garnish with maraschino cherries for color contrast. Guests will be eager to help themselves from this attractive plate. Lemon French dressing is the perfect accompaniment for this salad.

California navel oranges will be coming into the markets soon now—be on the lookout for them. These are the ideal eating oranges—they're seedless and easiest of all to peel. Sweet and juicy, too, just right for salads.
