Ray H. Glasley includes in one volume such wars as the Rogue River, Yakima, Modoc, Nez Perce, and Bannock.

John Hersey's new novel is a departure from his others such as "The Wall" and "A Bell for Adano." This one, "The Marmot Drive," is about a small New England community of today embarked upon a drive to rid the community of an infestation of woodchucks. The drive succeeds mostly in creating tensions that are released on a convenient scapegoat.

The Sky Block by Steve Frazee is a story about the attempts of various government agencies to discover and capture intact some secret menace believed to be housed in Blue Peak and to be causing a drought disastrous to the welfare of the entire nation.

A novel about a Quaker during the Revolutionary War who refused to pay taxes to the Continental Congress and fought with his five wild brothers a war within a war is "Fire and the Hammer" by Shirley Barker.

Algonquin is a novel about a dog and its impact on the lives of a boy, his uncle, and his grandfather. Dion Henderson is the author.

Snowflake by Paul Gallico is fantasy with allegorical meaning, tracing the stages in the life of Snowflake from her birth through her transformations into water and finally into a fragment of autumn cloud.

The Scientific American Reader is a collection of articles concerning frontiers of scientific knowledge in astronomy, geology, genetics, atomic energy, and various other fields.

Sheet Metal Shop Practice by Leroy F. Bruce gives instructions for punching, drilling, and riveting; folding edges; forming, crimping, bearing, and grooving; notching, clipping, and wiring; turning, burring and raising, soldering, and welding.

Edward F. Rodenbaugh in his Sketches of Idaho Geology includes chapters on the work of the winds, glaciers, volcanoes, fossils, rock towers, and ancient lakes.

Meat Inspection Law Requested at Livestock Meeting

Members of Oregon's meat industry lent their support to a compulsory meat inspection law at the recent livestock and meat marketing conference at Oregon State college.

Nearly all sections of the industry had earlier mentioned the need for meat inspection in their individual reports. Producers, marketing agencies, packers, retailers, labor organizations and consumers were represented at the conference, sponsored by the OSC extension service.

The motion for inspection came from Larry Williams, Grant county cattleman. He asked for compulsory inspection after slaughter.

Three other recommendations came out of the two-day conference. One introduced by Harold Kummer, Hillsboro meat packer, asked for a committee made up of all parts of the livestock and meat industry to work out its problems. The conference had been the first time all groups in the marketing chain had met together.

Another motion endorsed the apprenticeship and training program for workmen in the meat industry. Help for consumers was the final recommendation. OSC extension service was asked to consider a consumer marketing specialist for the Portland area to develop a consumer education program.

Earlier in the conference, Bill Southworth of Seneca, said one of the biggest problems facing the individual producer is to know the quality and value of his livestock. Freight rates and lack of information on sales were mentioned as other problems.

Marketing agencies, represented by Prosser Clark, Portland and Ellis White, Ontario, suggested educational field meetings to discuss grades and values of livestock.

Packers and wholesalers committee look to new feeding and management of cattle to even market supply. They asked more attention to disease, parasites and bruises, which cause losses on market animals.

2,681 CHILDREN GET AUDIOMETER TESTS

(Continued from Page 1) Physicians, who examined the children, were asked to send the county health department reports of their findings and to date 55 reports have been received. When the reports are submitted from the physicians, they are recorded on the family record and are sent to the school the child attends, the parents and the Oregon State Board of Health.

Of the 34 children in the south part of the county tested in 1952 and referred for follow-up, ten have moved out of the county and 24 were retested in the fall of 1953. Only 11 of the 24 were referred back to the health department for further follow-up.

Mrs. Farris explained that this means the hearing of 13 children who had hearing losses when tested in 1952, either returned to normal or had improved sufficiently to make further follow-up unnecessary. All of the 24 children had medical treatment in 1952-53.

All children referred for follow-up in 1953 will be retested in the fall of 1954 by an audiometrist from the Oregon State Board of Health.

POTATO GROWERS HEAR BRIGHT OUTLOOK ON PRICES

(Continued from Page 1) complete information on seed used is important. He showed that Oregon seed supplies, because of winter test plot readings that are available on all certified losses, can be more accurately rated for quality than supplies from states which have no test plot readings or one which is completed too late.

Howard Saucy, the international farm youth delegate to France showed slides and gave his impressions of farming and farm living in France from his trip there last summer.

Nephi Grigg, manager of the Oregon Frozen Foods corp. discussed operation of that plant for processing potatoes. He cited an ever increasing market for processed potatoes as an outlet for more of Malheur county's production. From two to three cars per day of potatoes are being processed by one work shift at the plant now, Grigg said, and estimated that at full capacity the plant could handle half the normal production of potatoes in Malheur county.

Earl Winegar of Ontario was re-elected as association director from the Ontario district. Maurice Judd, Jr., was elected director from the Adrian district replacing Louis Pratt. Sam Hartley of Nyssa was re-elected as director at large. Emil Maag of Jamieson resigned as director of Vale district and Floyd Miles of Vale was elected to fill this position.

The association voted to contribute funds to a daily produce market reporting service to be carried on in co-operation with the state of Idaho and the USDA.

A new schedule of tolerances for U. S. potato grades was discussed and referred to association directors to make recommendation on their adoption.
