Grass Burning Destroys Birds

Farmer spare that pheasant, could well be the cry at this time of the year when tradition dictates that summer fallow be burned.

In an article in the Baker Democrat Herald, county extension agent John Hesketh wrote the following on the subject.

"I have just learned of another good argument against the practice of burning summer fallow. 'Karl Morton, district game agent of the Oregon State Game commission, was in the other day and reported making a check on a stubble field he saw being burned early in May. The check revealed that seven pheasant nests had been destroyed in approximately 25 acres of grain stubble.

"If burning must be done, Karl points out that stubble, weed patches, and fence rows burned before April 1 would result in little chance of interference in
