Gate City Journal "Celebrates" Its Golden Anniversary With This Issue

The Gate City Journal is celebrating its 50th birthday this week with the first issue of its 51st volume. Strange as it may seem, the present publisher and his predecessor, Klaas V. Powell, have been unable to obtain much of the early history of the newspaper that was founded in Nyssa in 1905. The first five years' files have been lost, destroyed or misplaced and efforts to locate them have been fruitless.

According to a book published in 1950, "Pioneer Days in Malheur County," by Jacob Ray Gregg, the Journal was launched as "The News by the Emison Brothers in 1905 with O. O. Davis as editor. A year later the newspaper was acquired by the Francis Brothers who changed the name to The Sun. Five years later, in 1910, the name was changed to The Gate City Journal.

The book gives few details about the early publications, although it indicates that it has been one continuous newspaper with the name changed twice.

Somewhere along the line, past publishers "mixed up" the volume and issue numbers resulting in papers in 1910 going back to volume 1. In later years the original was dated from the newspaper's inception in 1905. Powell, who published the Journal for 11 years until April 1, 1952 when the paper was purchased by the present publisher, stated that he had on numerous occasions attempted to locate the missing files and to learn about various changes that were made from time to time.

The Gate City Journal at the present time has a circulation of 1,387 and serves a vast area surrounding Nyssa in eastern Oregon and western Idaho. During the past three years, thousands of dollars worth of new equipment has been added to the mechanical plant for the newspaper as well as the commercial job printing plant.

At the present time there are seven full-time employees in addition to 13 rural correspondents who write news for the surrounding communities.

4-H Leaders Will Meet At 3-Day Session In Baker

Eastern Oregon 4-H club leaders will be looking toward the future at their annual conference, according to Burton S. Hutton, state 4-H club leader at Oregon State College.

"Building Today for Tomorrow" is the theme of this three-day meeting to be held at Baker on Feb. 1 to 3. Special attention will be given to the beginning leaders and the relation of 4-H to the community, Hutton said. A new 4-H film "The Town That Came Back" will be previewed for the leaders. Not yet released, it had its first showing at the National 4-H club congress last November.

The state international farm youth exchange program will be explained. Dorothy Teel, IFYE delegate to Germany last summer, will report some of her experiences living with farm families in that country.

Guest speakers will include Mrs. Laural Sabrasky of the USDA Extension Service field studies division, who has been working with leader training surveys, and Robert Scott of Westinghouse Electric corporation, who will assist leaders with demonstrations.

Mr. and Mrs. Don Humble arrived home Tuesday evening from Missouri where they had been visiting.

CARD PARTY PLANNED FOR POLIO BENEFIT

The Kingman Grange of Adrian will sponsor a benefit pinocle party Saturday evening at the Adrian grade school at 8 p. m. All funds from the evening will be donated to the Polio fund and the general public is invited. Prizes will be given and lunch served following the play.

PAUL HOUSE NAMED MAYOR AT MEETING

(Continued from Page 1) would be undesirable; springs on the Idaho side of the Snake river would produce about one-third the water needed; transmission costs would be too great to use water from Owyhee reservoir; wells west of town would require expensive transmission lines with an indefinite amount and infiltration galleries along the Snake river were proved by test to produce an insufficient quantity.

Present tests to find wells to use the Ranney method, which is a patented system which "reaches out" for underground water have indicated a large quantity of water available near the Snake river on Amalgamated Sugar Co. property.

E. W. Silitch, representing the Ranney company, will meet with councilmen next week after further reports are available on the test wells.

Applegate said that a new contract with the engineering firm is being studied and if the Ranney system is used, with guarantees as to quantity, efforts will be made to have all contracts and agreements completed by Jan. 31. When all costs are ascertained a bond election will be called in February to ask voter approval for funds necessary. It is believed that all bonds and interest can be paid from water revenue without need for additional tax levies.

During the intervening time, consulting engineers will make a study of needs for the city's water mains and other improvements.

Hunter Deaths 13, Injuries 37 For '54 Seasons

The specter of death and dismemberment cut a wide swath through Oregon's hunters during the 1954 seasons. According to figures compiled by the Oregon State Game commission, 13 persons were shot fatally and 37 wounded nonfatally during the past 12 months. However, the commission points out that the methods used in collecting information regarding hunting accidents has become more efficient, and the total of 50 accidents recorded for 1954 is not as large an increase as might be indicated by casual comparison to previous years.

First fatal accident of 1954 took place when a 23-year-old Navy veteran was riding in a pick-up while carrying a loaded rifle. The rifle discharged, sending a bullet through his head. Final fatality was caused Dec. 29 when a youth from Utah was hunting waterfowl in the Snake river area and his loaded shotgun discharged as he pulled it from his automobile.

Other accidents recorded were also much the same as ones that took place in former years. One apparent cause of the increased number of recorded accidents was the large number of shotgun wounding during pheasant season. Thirteen persons were victims of careless shotgun handling. Other categories ran about the same as during 1953.
