Malheur Feeders' Day Scheduled

Oregon cattlemen can expect some more answers to the old question of how to buy and sell cattle for the best net returns.

These and other problems of cattle feeding will be discussed April 13th at the Malheur Feeders' day near Ontario. The program is sponsored jointly by the Oregon State college experiment station and extension service.

five months will be on display. They represent five grades of feeders ranging from inferior up to choice. Each lot has been fed identical rations since November 18.

Neil Hoffman, Malheur experiment station superintendent, is in charge of the test to compare dollar returns of the various grades under normal feeding conditions. He has been assisted by John Landers, Oregon State college livestock specialist, and George Bain, Malheur county extension agent.

One of the major objectives of the experiment has been to determine the best selling time for each of the five lots during the past few months. They have been weighed and graded every 28 days since last fall. Landers says some animals that will now grade "prime," for example, could have been sold earlier as "high good" or "low choice" for higher net profits. Landers and Hoffman will discuss the experiment and distribute printed reports kept on each lot of animals since they went on feed.

Hoffman says the public is invited to the April 13th program. It starts at noon at the experiment station five miles south and west of Ontario just off the Vale highway.
