You and the West profit when Standard changes a dollar

Like you and your family, Standard Oil Company of California has to have money coming in to keep going. And like you, we must divide every dollar of this income into quite a few pieces to keep the bills paid. Our budgeting is naturally on a large scale, but the result is about the same: most of the money Standard takes in goes right back into circulation. And when a sum like $1,229,000,000 (our total income last year) goes into circulation, its benefits are broad and deep. Practically everyone in the West shared, directly or indirectly, in Standard's good year. We thank you for your patronage that made it possible. And we'd like you to know that a sizable piece of change from each of our dollars goes for things that improve service to you: research facilities for development of better products at low cost; new plants to make them more available; widespread exploration for new petroleum fields to help keep America's oil barrel full. To do these jobs, now and for the future, here's how we changed a Standard dollar:

38¢ from every dollar went for wages, services and goods. Of this $471,500,000 the largest item was for payroll, vacations, sickness payments, other employee benefits. Most of the rest went to buy supplies, from paper clips to steel, bought locally when possible. Standard was a customer of thousands of Western firms.

2¢ to working capital and debt. This $20 million increased inventories of products for future sale and included payments on debt.

13¢ paid for other new construction and exploration. It cost $162 million and it included money for refineries, pipe lines and for drilling wells in the search for new oil.

10¢ was set aside for depreciation, to help replace facilities as they wore out. A great deal of this $119 million went to workmen, technicians, and suppliers.

8¢ for taxes was divided among the U.S. government, states, counties and cities. Standard's tax bill came to $101,500,000... enough to build plenty of schools, bridges, park equipment, etc. Standard also collected product and sales taxes for federal, state and city governments.

22¢ went for crude oil. To supplement our own production, Standard bought millions of barrels from hundreds of independent producers. This cost $268 million—an important item to producers' profits and their employees' paychecks.

7¢ of every dollar, or $87 million, was left to divide among our owners, Standard's 117,035 shareholders, in return for the use of the money they have invested in the Company.
