Inflation Addiction—An Epidemic

Imagine an epidemic of alcoholism or drug addiction sweeping the United States.

Something similar is taking place. Inflation, an economic disease, is ruining the financial health of Americans and their nation.

Economists have diagnosed its causes and prescribed remedies. Communications media have funnelled their warnings and recommendations to the public. But not enough people have realized the epidemic's seriousness to force concerted action to stamp it out.

The nature of the disease is partly responsible. Like alcoholism and drug addiction, inflation causes a deceptive feeling of well-being. When one jolt wears off, its victims want another jolt, not a cure. Everything will be fine, they think, if they can just get another wage raise or more help from the government.

No one or two people can halt this epidemic. To be cured, inflation's victims (and let's face it—that's us) must realize what is happening and WANT to be cured. That will take fact-finding, will power and backbone enough to break the self-deceiving habit of demanding something for nothing—whether it be more pay without more production or more government spending without more taxes.

Upland Bird Outlook Poor

Upland bird hunters may find only fair gunning this fall in many sections of the state despite the high carry-over of adult birds this spring. The optimistic outlook by the game commission during the spring breeding survey has now turned to one of concern following incomplete brood counts in several key upland bird areas.

According to field reports, nesting conditions in eastern Oregon have been the poorest in years, and brood counts on pheasants, quail, and partridge appear to be considerably below the counts of last year. Production in the Willamette Valley and in Jackson and Klamath counties seem to be about normal.

In Umatilla County, pheasant production appears to be critical, with reports showing only 48 per cent of the hens with broods. These broods are small, averaging only three chicks per brood. Last year during the mid-July counts, 81 per cent of the hens were with broods which averaged 5.7 chicks per brood.

Valley quail and Hungarian partridge production in Umatilla County is also low, and the chukar partridge observed to date show only 17 per cent of the hens with broods compared to 80 per cent last year.

Pheasant production appears to be low in Malheur County with incomplete returns showing 55 per cent of the hens having broods averaging 4.6 chicks per brood compared to 71 per cent averaging 7 chicks last year. Other upland bird species in Malheur County show poor production, particularly chukars and sage grouse.

Pheasant and other upland production in the Willamette Valley appear good. More than 90 per cent of the pheasant hens observed had broods averaging 7.2 chicks per brood. These counts are comparable to last year.

The statewide inventory of upland game bird production will be complete by August 12 to provide the latest information for the August 14 hearing when the seasons and bag limits for 1959 will be set.

Antelope Hunters Get a Reprieve

Antelope hunters get a reprieve with a warning from the office of Gov. Mark Hatfield.

The reprieve permits them to hunt antelope during the regular short season from Aug. 15 to 19, despite the seriously dry condition of eastern Oregon forests. The warning from the governor concerns the danger of fire, and is a request for all antelope hunters to double their fire safety measures if they go hunting.

The governor in a statement to the day said: "Landowners in the antelope country know of the seriousness of the fire problem, but they do not wish to inconvenience the many hunters who have planned for a long time to make this hunt a part of their vacation."

"It has been decided to allow the antelope special hunting season to proceed as planned, but all hunters are warned that the fire threat to the forests has never been worse and extreme caution must be used at all times by those in the woods."
