4-H Club Contests To Demonstrate Use of Chemicals

Cash prizes will be awarded to Oregon 4-H youths who do a skillful job of demonstrating safe use and handling of agricultural chemicals according to rules of a new contest.

Cal Monroe, state 4-H extension agent at Oregon State college, reports that the Western Agricultural Chemicals association is offering the first contest in this area to Oregon's 31,000 4-H club members. Top demonstrators at county fairs will receive $5 each and a chance to compete for more cash at the state fair.

Purpose of the contest is to promote safe use of chemical pesticides, which include all chemical sprays, dusts and other poisons used to kill insects, weeds, rodents and other pests. It also includes pesticides used to control growth of crop plants.

Suggested demonstration topics include safe handling and storage of poisonous chemicals, rodent control, use of right equipment when handling poisonous chemicals and reading labels.

The WCAA will help furnish 4-H members with demonstration materials and encourage cooperation from local stores.

The growth of the agricultural chemicals industry since World War II has enabled saving of millions of lives and prevention of
